JACARANDA 2013

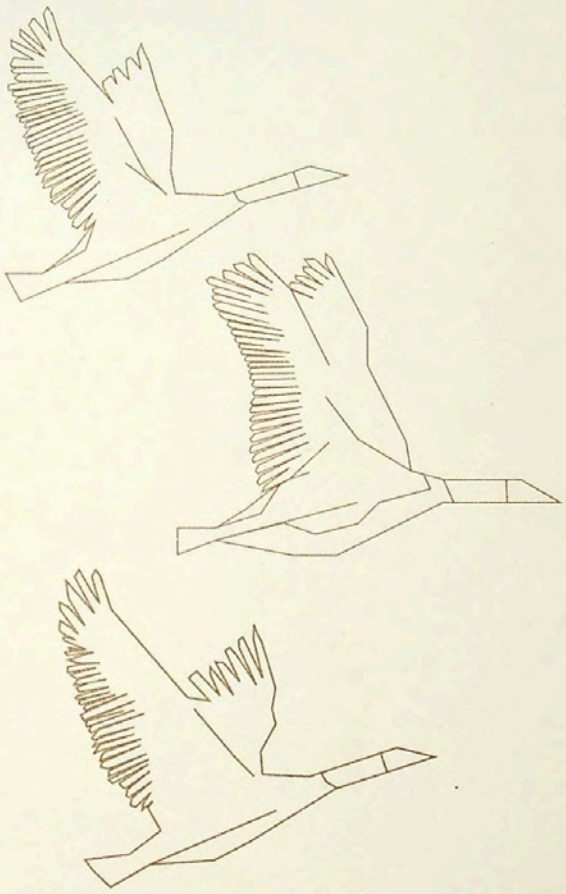

When it comes to finding a place in the puzzle of life, geese seem to have that under control. Here's a few facts about geese that you might not know:

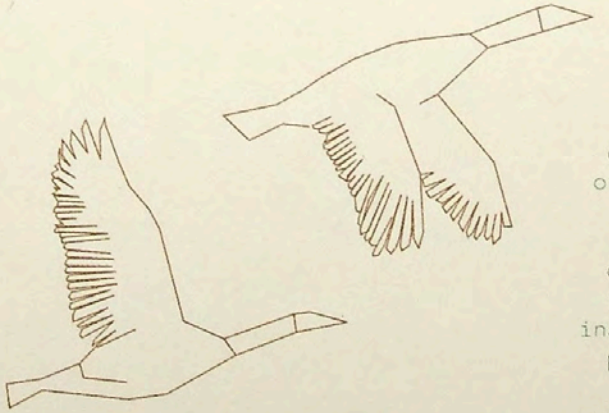

- Flying in a V formation doesn't just look beautiful, it actually adds 71 percent more flying range than if each bird flew alone.
- Geese take turns leading the formation, rotating when necessary, and honk to encourage those at the front.
- If a goose is injured or wounded while in formation, two other geese will break away from the formation and follow it to the ground, caring for it until it is able to fly again.

What do geese have to do with the 2013 Jacaranda? It's simple – geese don't go it alone, and neither should we.

People who share a common goal can reach it quicker and easier when they share the journey with others. Recognising that each person has something unique to contribute and sharing leadership responsibilities can prevent one person burning out from taking the whole load. When we become interdependent, encouraging each other during the rough times, we become more productive and, ultimately, more fulfilled.

When it comes to relationships, the geese have got it down.

As beautiful as this Jacaranda is, it isn't complete until you add some of 'you' to it. The stickers you'll find are for you to make this JACARANDA your own. Colour them, autograph them, and stick them on the inside cover to make your own patterns and designs. Trade them with friends to make unique masterpieces with the people who make up part of your Avondale puzzle.

Make this JAC yours.

JAC

A young boy on a Pathfinder camp once snuck up on a tent full of girls to listen in on their conversation. One guess as to what they were talking about: boys. And not just any boys — camp boys.

Naturally his ears pricked up when they started talking about him. "He's so nice... he's so cute... he's so..." the list went on like music to his ears. Until it was time for a special girl — the one he really liked — to share her thoughts. "Oh! This is surely my finest moment!" thought this young boy, as his heart throbbed in anticipation. She started to speak. "Yeah he's nice... and he's cute... but his nose is so ugly!"

Shattered! Destroyed! His finest moment had just been chewed up, spat out and trodden on.

With the tent of girls in raucous laughter, the little boy slouched down till he thought he was invisible, trying not to choke on the frog in his throat. Maybe it served him right for eavesdropping. Still, one can't help but feel at least a bit sorry for this little ugly-nosed boy.

However, my question is: how would he have been without a nose? Noseless. Is that what he wanted? Was her opinion even valid? For even the ugliest nose or big toe or belly button is covered with the fingerprints of God. The body would not be whole without them.

God's Word declares, "Just as our bodies have many parts and each part has a special function, so it is with Christ's body. We are many parts of one body, and we all belong to each other" (Rom 12:4-5 NLT).

Irreplaceable — that describes each part of the body. And that describes you, too. No person can replace you. No, not even God could make another you. He has made each person so utterly unique, that the puzzle is not complete without you. 4999 pieces are still not enough to complete a 5000 piece puzzle.

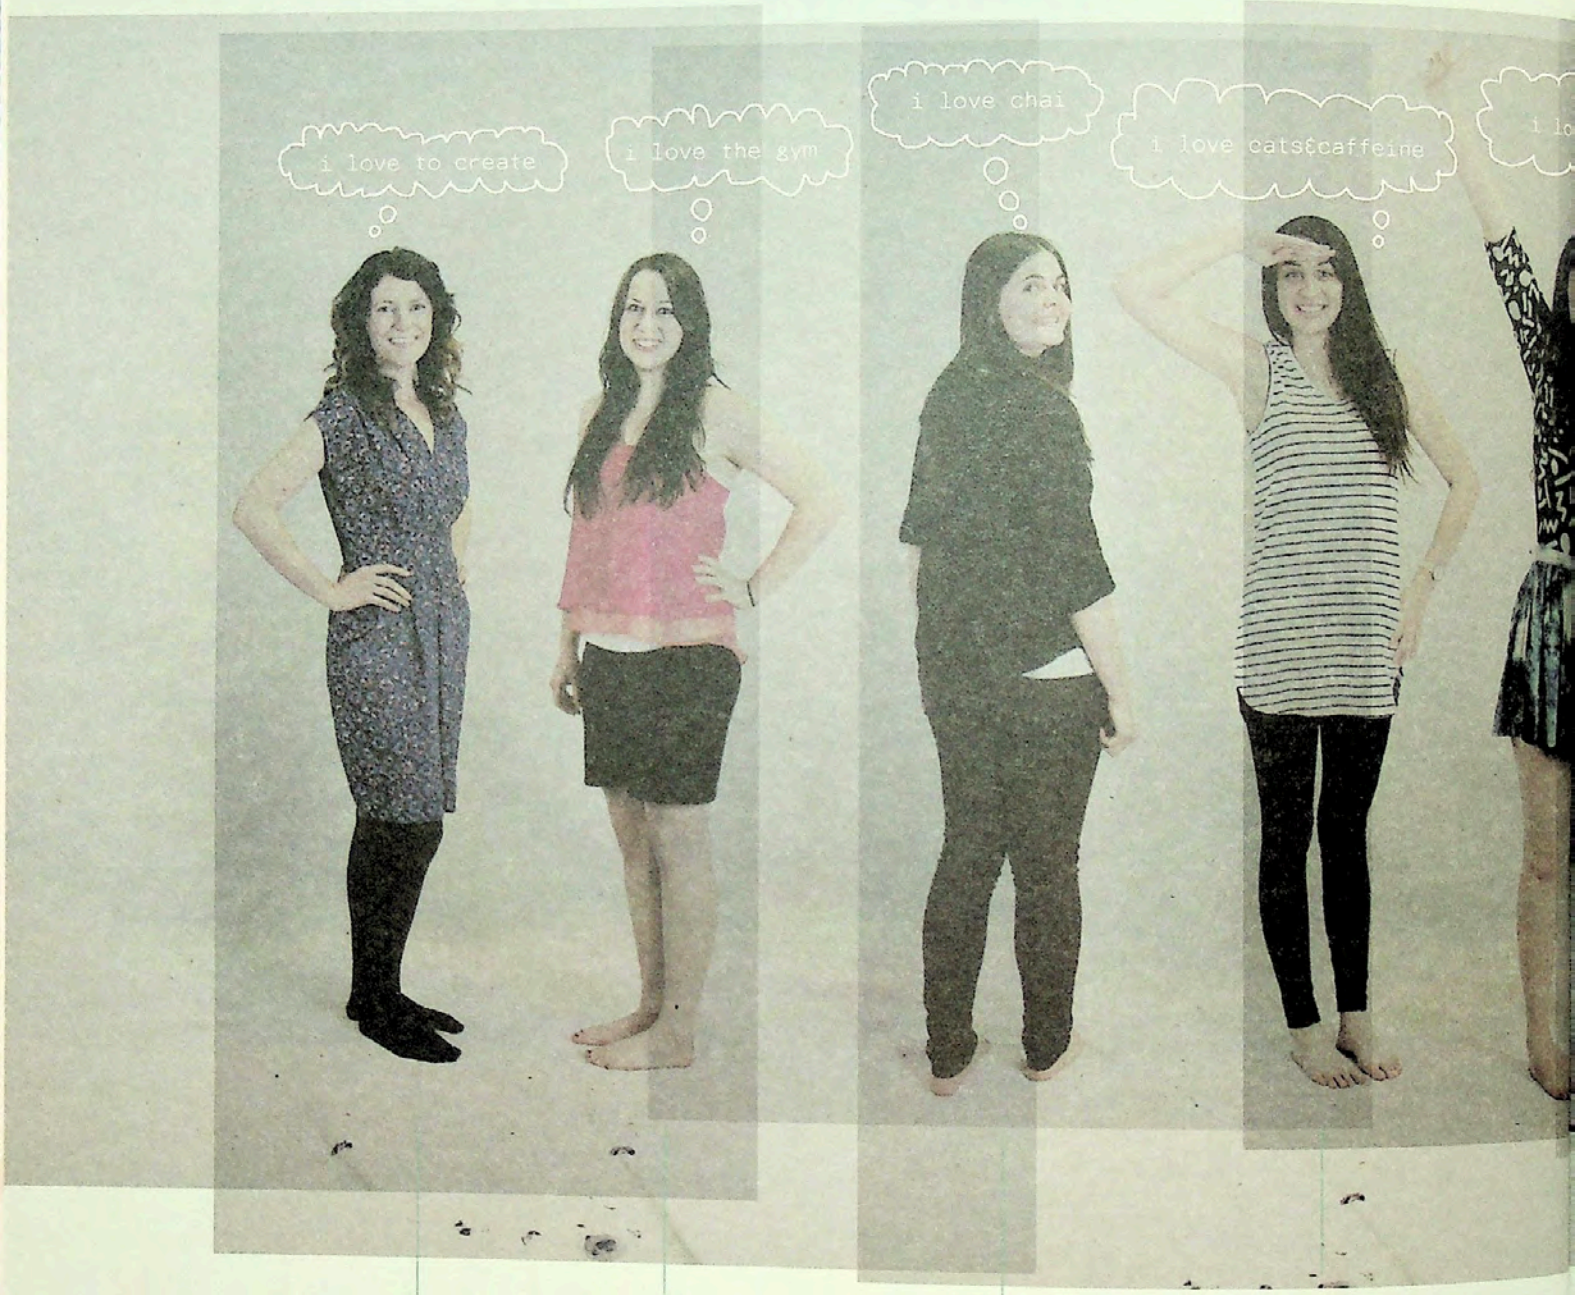

So be a part of the picture God is piecing together. When you say, "Yes Jesus," you can be sure you're in the right place. And that's even truer than the nose on my face.

Creating a Jacaranda is a beautiful (and often stressful) challenge that cannot be completed without the help of dozens of dedicated individuals. I would like to thank each and every person who has helped us along our Jacaranda journey this year, and for all those who have blessed us with their knowledge and expertise. We couldn't have done this without you!

I may be sightly biased, but I happen to think the 2013 Jac has been blessed with the best design team in Jacaranda history. Danelle, you have been a lifesaver, time and time again! Thank you for all your hard work in pulling this project together, and your constant smiles even through stress. Jacinda, your talent takes my breath away! You've made this book so beautiful, so personal. Thank you for sharing your creative mind, your friendship, and many cups of Chai with me! Eily, it is my lifelong goal to one day be as organised as you. Until then, I will continue to marvel at how you merge creativity and productivity to create something so beautiful. Amy, your cheerful persistence throughout it all makes my heart smile. Thank you for your positivity! Ashleigh, your commitment is awe inspiring, and we've all been blessed by your skills. And Donna, thank you for all your support, your encouragement, and for putting up with all my questions! I have learnt so much from you, and have been so blessed to be included in your talented team.

Mahalia, your enthusiasm is so contagious! Thanks for being willing to do whatever needed to be done, and for being a great support through this journey.

I have no doubt that your Jacaranda next year will be every bit as stunning as you are!

Jesse and Ash, you are such skilled photographers and so good at making people feel comfortable in front of the lens! Thanks for always being willing to do those last minute photo shoots, you're the best!

Kevin and Kathy, thank you for your answers to my endless questions, and for helping me navigate through this crazy, wonderful project. I would have been so lost without your help!

Ben, Josh, Reuter and the IT Crowd, thank you for the tech support that went way over my head, for saving my neck more times than I can count, and for the many laughs!

Brenton, your words of wisdom and sound advice have been invaluable. Thank you for encouraging me along every step of the way.

And lastly, to my friends, family, and Josh: You've kept me laughing (and somewhat sane), and I couldn't have done this without you. Now let's go to the beach!

With fluid precision and delicate strength, he mesmerizes crowds by transforming an ordinary block of clay into a graceful and elegant clay pitcher. And then, just as the clay form is complete, he slices it swiftly in two. Surprise! His onlookers gasp, but a mischievous grin and the ever-present twinkle in his eyes reminds us to take life a little less seriously. This is the clay master at work — Avondale's treasured Arts lecturer, Tony Martin.

But it's his journey from zero to hero that is perhaps even more intriguing than his amazing artwork. Recounting his first ever pottery lesson, he says: "I could not believe I was so terrible at something." However, rather than letting his initial incompetence discourage him, he let it become the fire that spurred him on to greatness. He inspires students to believe that they can be, and achieve, anything they put their minds to, through zealous determination and patient persistence.

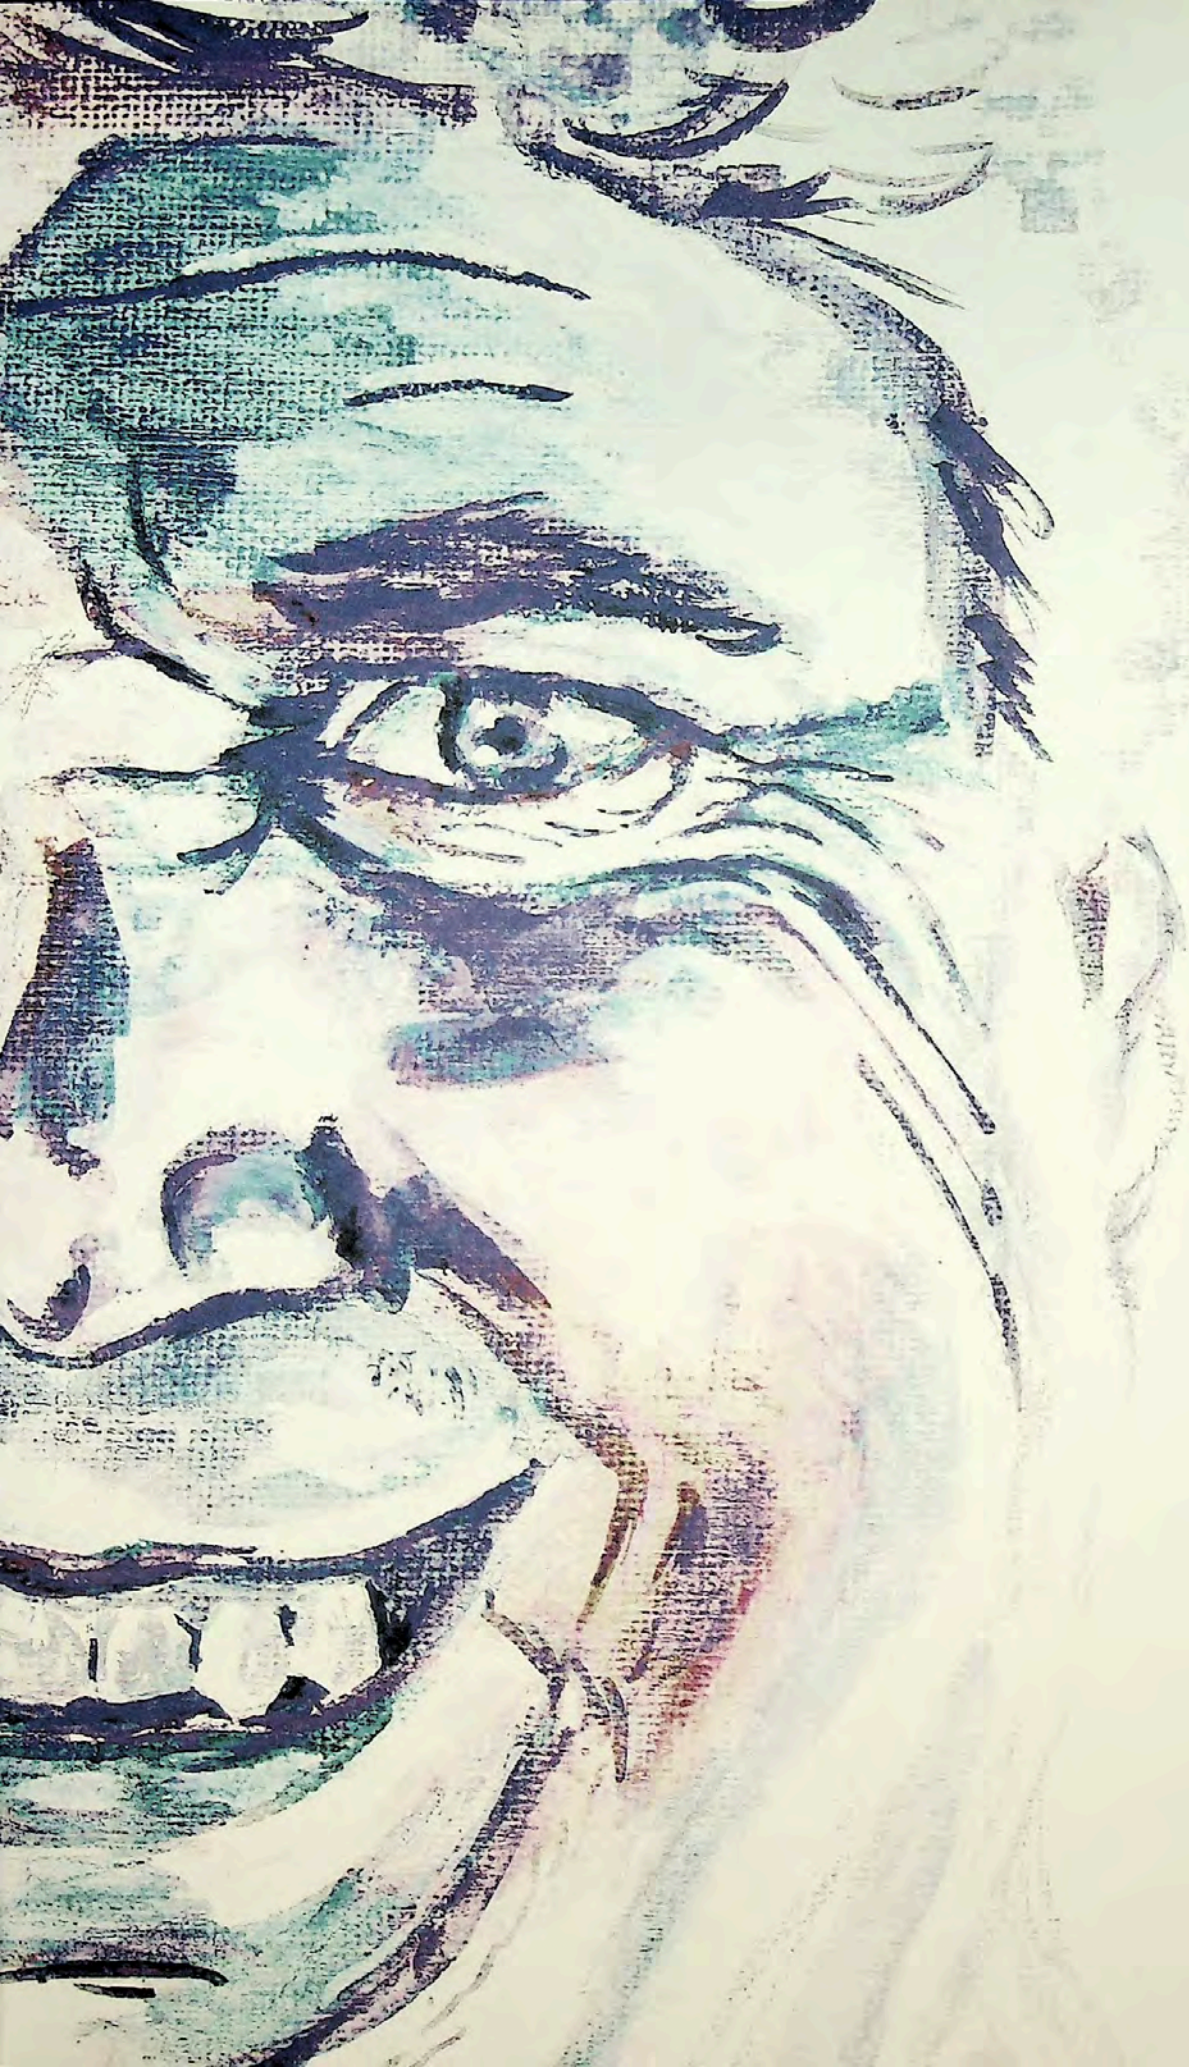

Tony is a visionary. A "constant, incurable dreamer" — he loves change. Perhaps this is what appeals to him about pottery: guiding and forming mere lumps of clay into vessels of greatness.

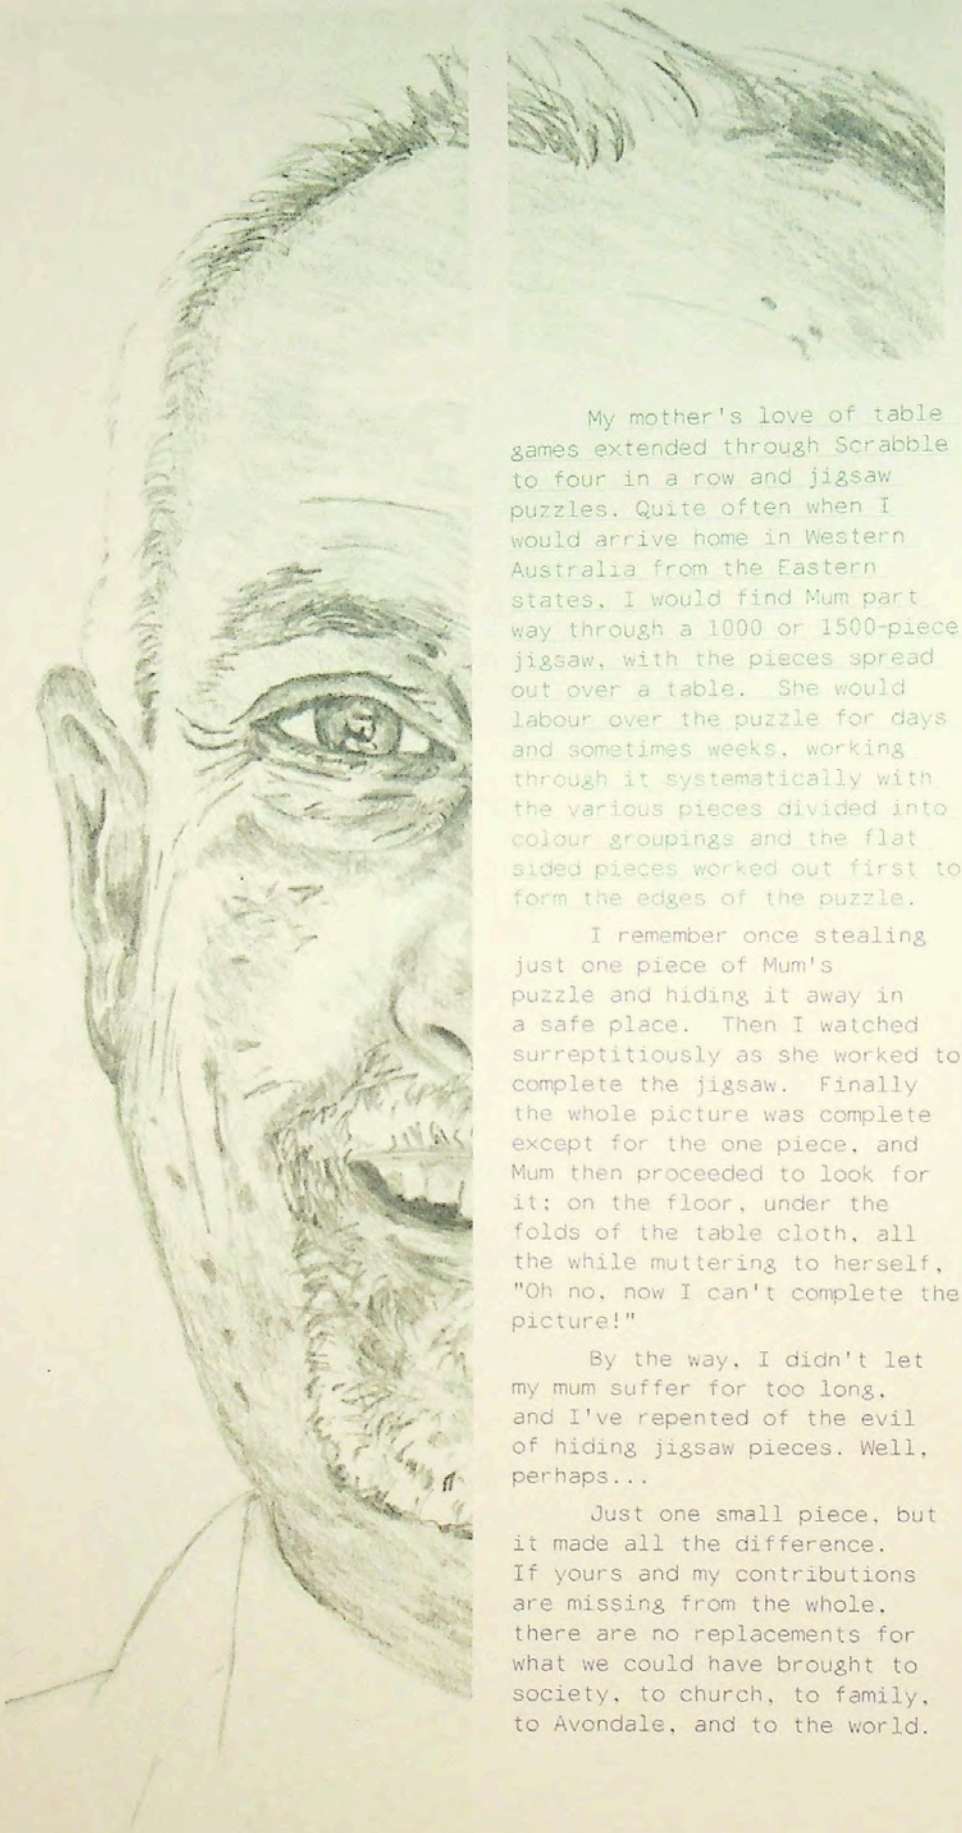

However, to limit his visionary creative mind to the pottery wheel would be short-sighted, for his creativity permeates every aspect of his life — particularly in his role as Head of the School of Humanities and Creative Arts. Tony was part of the original team who conceptualised and implemented the unique practice-based Graphic Design course at Avondale College: That Design Studio. Tony enjoys "subverting the system" so that future generations of creative students can flourish. Tony believes that creativity should not be limited to the visual arts. Creativity is a universal principle: "The very essence of creativity is an innate belief everything can be improved, or done better."

Gifted with remarkable intuition, he understands his 'strange' art students and their artwork. This, coupled with a genuine desire to inspire them to greatness is what makes Tony such a wonderful course convenor. Like blocks of clay on the wheel, he enjoys guiding students towards their dreams and aspirations — watching as they find themselves through their creative practice.

He doesn't lecture in the traditional sense. Rather, his method of teaching is to provoke the greatest depth of thought with as few words as possible. His favourite word "Why?" challenges students to think for themselves and forge their own creative identity, while his favourite phrase "Why not?" challenges students to push boundaries and shatter preconceived, limiting notions.

"We all grow up with a whole set of expectations imposed upon us from family, friends, church, school, society and parents. As a visual person, the best way I can describe this is to say that we are given a set of pictures and told that if we grow up to look like this we will be successful, accepted, nice, easy to get on with, compliant and one of the crowd. I believe strongly that time spent at Avondale is an opportunity to paint your own pictures, dream your own dreams. It is a time to change from follower to leader, to find your own passions and beliefs and define what will drive and motivate you to become a person of integrity and worth."

My mother's love of table games extended through Scrabble to four in a row and jigsaw puzzles. Quite often when I would arrive home in Western Australia from the Eastern states, I would find Mum part way through a 1000 or 1500-piece jigsaw, with the pieces spread out over a table. She would labour over the puzzle for days and sometimes weeks, working through it systematically with the various pieces divided into colour groupings and the flat sided pieces worked out first to form the edges of the puzzle.

I remember once stealing just one piece of Mum's puzzle and hiding it away in a safe place. Then I watched surreptitiously as she worked to complete the jigsaw. Finally the whole picture was complete except for the one piece, and Mum then proceeded to look for it; on the floor, under the folds of the table cloth, all the while muttering to herself, "Oh no, now I can't complete the picture!"

By the way, I didn't let my mum suffer for too long, and I've repented of the evil of hiding jigsaw pieces. Well, perhaps...

Just one small piece, but it made all the difference. If yours and my contributions are missing from the whole, there are no replacements for what we could have brought to society, to church, to family, to Avondale, and to the world. We are indeed indispensable. Our particular personalities and gifts are not replicated in anyone else.

Students are essential pieces of the 2013 Avondale mosaic; some of whom will be scattered at graduation to communities across Australia and farther afield. Others have two or three or four or more years remaining at Avondale. Some staff members form the borders of the jigsaw, while others have been here for so long that they possibly rank as corner pieces. But all have played a vital part this year. And Avondale's mission—and perhaps the future of society and the church — is dependent on every piece contributing to the picture.

Banksy, a pseudonymous English graffiti artist, says it best (although probably sardonically): There's nothing more dangerous than someone who wants to make the world a better place. So, what are you planning to do and be?

I'll admit, I'm not much of a puzzle person. It's not because I don't like them; I just wasn't blessed with the ability to sit still for long periods of time. But I've long been an admirer of the way puzzles turn nothing into something.

I have a stash of lost things in my room that I've carried with me over the years, hoping to find the places they belong. There's a cap to a flash drive I don't ever remember owning, a guitar pick I forgot to give back to a friend in New Zealand, and a puzzle piece. It's left over from the time I attempted a 5000 piece puzzle with my eight year old sister. The picture on the box was faded beyond recognition, but we were sure we could put it together anyway. Two hours later our efforts had collapsed into fits of laughter, and months later we were still finding pieces under the couch. Needless to say, we never found out what it was supposed to look like.

For the most part, there's nothing particularly impressive about a single puzzle piece. It's just a confusing mess of colours and shapes; beautifully original, but on its own, purposeless. Without the rest of the pieces, it will never be able to reach it's full potential. The bigger picture will always be a mystery.

In some ways, it's easy to be like that single puzzle piece. We live in an I world independent, introspective, individualistic. We're used to finding ways to make our own mark on the world. But there's a picture out there so much bigger than just us. Maybe it's time we started thinking about how our mark fits in the grand scheme of things and how we can help the people around us reach their full potential, too.

As you look through this year's Jacaranda, you'll see some of the pieces of Avondale's puzzle. For some, 2013 has been the beginning of this adventure, for others a continuation. For the graduating class, this is, in some ways, the end. But this isn't the only puzzle for which you were made. There's family, friends, church groups, communities every area of your life has some mysterious picture that you get to contribute to.

Like me, you may not know where you fit in the puzzle of life just yet. But don't let that stop you searching. The bigger picture will be even clearer when you add your piece.

"The best thing about working with SAC this year has been to see the joy and fun that these events can bring." - Mike Ringrose

Week one of first semester is always an exciting time. Returning students spend the time catching up with those they've spent all summer away from, whilst new students wander around campus trying to find their own niche with their roommates and new acquaintances. The ice breaker that brings them all together? Speed friending.

Spend two minutes with each person on the other side of the table, and by the end of the night you'll have met at least a dozen more people to fit into your Avondale puzzle.

>> Mark's Piece in the Puzzle.

Captain America has no superhuman powers, but he's transformed by something bigger than himself. Just like this guy, whose name set him up to Mark the world.

Growing up in Christchurch, New Zealand before crossing the ditch to the Central Coast ,NSW when he was thirteen; Mark was a mixed bag of mischief and maturity, and remains so to this day.

Following high school and four gap years of rugby, he felt the call to College. Four years of experience later, with some PE and Bible teaching along the way, this overpassionate go-getter has a contagious spirit to share.

He believes that people's passions come from God, and that they are meant to be a network, a joy, and a place to put all their energy and efforts. For Mark, sport is where it's at.

Those close to him say that his level of organisation for something he is passionate about, and his love for sharing the fire within is unparalleled. And it's Mark's love for touch football that has impacts above and beyond his sphere of influence.

With a passion for mentoring young people through sport, Mark is big on building relationships and living authentically. It's all about mentoring — naturally.

He is also big on being mentored himself, and emphasises the strive to be humble enough to learn from others. People who aren't afraid to rock the boat to make improvements — they're his inspiration.

Mark feels that if we all, in our own little sections, do our bit with what we've been given, then the world has the opportunity to be the best it can be.

"We don't need to do everything. We just need to look after whatever we've been given authority over — a passion for. That's what the world really needs."

Now you know, his name really does say it all.

Jamming with Peter Dixon and the barn dance band

Let's be honest, as a first year you hardly know anyone. The barn dance is probably the best way to meet people, both guys and girls. As a first year, I found myself in an interesting college social. Coming as an overseas student I didn't know what to expect. Barn dance, in and of itself was an amazing experience. From not knowing anyone, to knowing heaps of people, it brought people together. It was where everyone cut loose, some more than others, but everyone enjoyed. Personally, I enjoyed the crowd surfing and jumping up on stage with Peter Dixon. Barn dance was truly a highlight of first semester.

The usual stale smell of the overcrowded train carriage mixes strangely with the pungent odour of green and gold face paint and nail polish that lingers in the air. Every seat is taken and it's standing room only. Everyone's buzzing and the excitement is palpable.

Arriving at the stadium, the sacred ritual of walking to the ground stimulates the senses. Music blares as fans mill around in groups, discussing match scenarios in between bites of exorbitantly priced fast food. TV cameras capture fans' colourful support, expressed by shouting, singing, flag-waving and dancing.

Inside, the atmosphere builds slowly as fans trickle in, some coming straight from work for the Tuesday night match. The sun sets behind the far grandstand, throwing the pitch into an eerie red glow. Nearby, the noisy opposition Omani fans are in full voice.

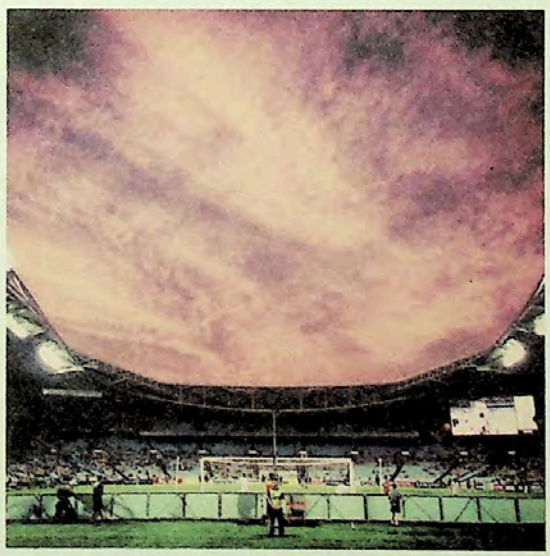

The crowd is still settling into their seats when suddenly the Omani fans erupt in wild celebration. Somehow, they've scored. This wasn't supposed to happen; the match is only twenty minutes old.

Into the second half and again Oman scores. Although worse this time: an own goal. To ease the pain, the crowd resorts to performing the Mexican Wave. But just when all seems lost, Sanitarium's favourite-Tim Cahill-heads home a goal to inspire a stirring late comeback that thrills the crowd.

The match ends 2-2. Despite failing to win, the Socceroos later qualify for the World Cup.

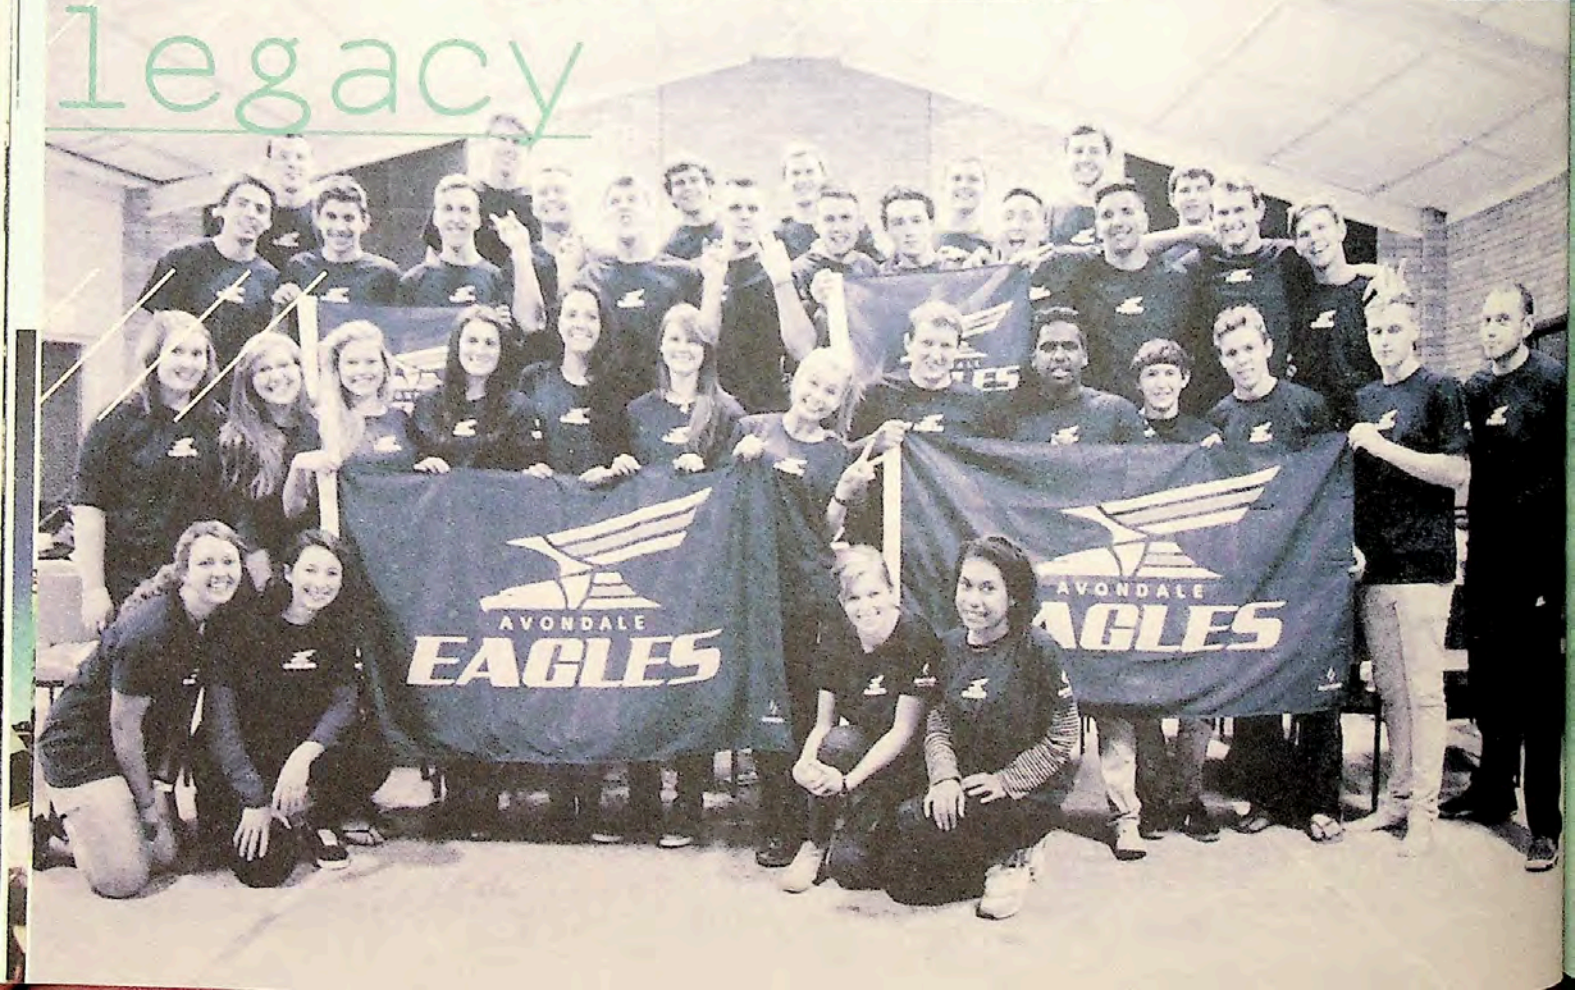

And when the nail polish fades and the face paint washes off, the fans are the winners on this memorable autumn evening.

the sporting legacy

Unigames

A large team of enthusiastic and hopeful Avondale students jumps off the bus and bundles into the Wollongong SDA Church hall, setting up their beds on the bare concrete floor.

The excitement in the air is palpable as each team gets together to review strategies and talk game plans. As Up & Go's are consumed by the boxful, the competitive drive is building in all of us.

Whilst comparisons to Storm Co and MOTO trips are made, there is a noticeably different feel to this trip: we are here to play sport.

If you haven't heard by now, Avondale did very well at these games, finishing third overall in the per capita standings, which is a noteworthy achievement.

Avondale teams pulled off victories over some of the biggest universities in the country, including UTS, ANU, UWS and a memorable men's basketball victory over Sydney Uni.

These results led to a number of discussions about how Avondale is able to field quality, winning teams from such a small pool of students with seemingly no reason to excel at sports.

That is, until you understand the strength of the sporting culture at Avondale.

In any given week at College there are opportunities to play basketball, netball, touch football, soccer, cricket, squash, tennis and many more. There is also an active gym community and a constant stream of students running up and down College Drive.

In conjunction with this active lifestyle, Avondale students tend to be interested in healthy eating, as evidenced by the pressure on the Caf to provide the healthiest options available.

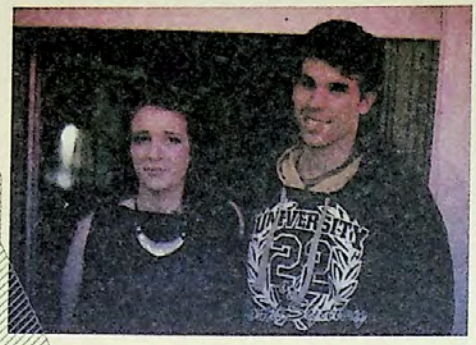

The strong connection between Avondale and sport has been around for many years. The healthy, active lifestyle traditionally encouraged by the Church has built this culture over time, and now Avondale students are getting opportunities to showcase this relationship on a national scale.

A debt of gratitude is owed to all those who have gone before us and contributed to the sporting culture here. Their sporting legacy is still embraced at Avondale today, and we hope it continues long after we leave.

—Hayden Stuart

Tunics may not have been on the list of things to bring from home, but with such fabulous outfits at the Greek Party, you'd be forgiven for assuming they were. >> Tash's Piece in the Puzzle

>> nugget [na-get] noun
Small and precious. No two nuggets are the same.

Tash is a nugget to the T. Calling her 'pirate' or 'Bollywood DJ' will also make her smile. But then again, she's always getting her grin on.

The West Australian coast brought her up a water baby, and teenagehood saw her flourish in Melbourne. She's had her hubcaps stolen, her hair cut into a mullet, and fallen victim to an attempted smurfing. As for her heart, that's now found in India. And although she's keen to be their next biggest thing in DJ-ing, this story's about a different beat.

First feelings on India: What the HECK! Day three of her literally life-changing MOTO trip in 2011, and she settled with three words. Overwhelming. Confronting. Beautiful. This was India to her, and as soon as she met the kids from AoZora School, she found herself addicted to what has become her second home. They've welcomed her back four times already.

Her passion is in serving and loving the children of her adored India, and this manifests itself in everything she does, through everything she is. You can't miss the fact she learnt not only to speak a language in eight months, but also to read and write, with one of her favourite memories being the time she prayed in Hindi at 7.28.

"It was such a special privilege to pray to our God, in my second love country's language, to honour both the language and our God."

People who embrace who they are, who live every moment, right into the moment, inspire Tash. And it's for this very reason that Tash is an inspirer herself. She's made a family in India. The whole town of Bodh Gaya knows her by name, and when she rides in on a motorbike everyone bursts forth with "Natarrrsha Natarrrsha, you're back!"

"I think they know me as that crazy Australian chick who cares about them."

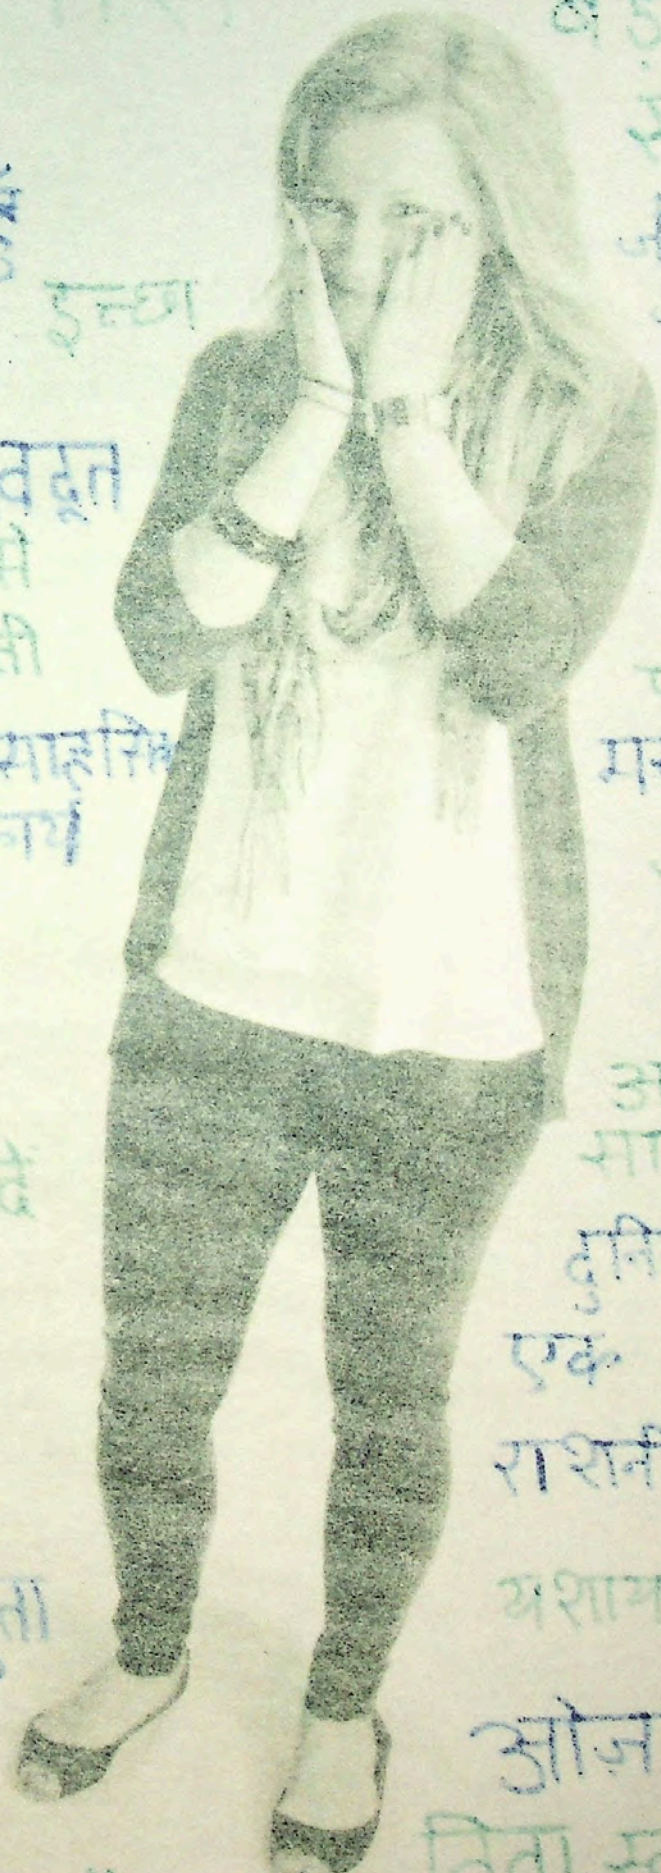

The moment those children smile and she sees their teeth, they're the exact moments Tash knows she's right where she's needed.

"Someday in the future I want to eradicate the need for orphanages in India — I want to start the last generation of orphanages."

The moment she herself shows her teeth, they're the exact moments you know the mark a nugget can make on their world.

A night in Sydney with friends for team mates, crazy costumes, and a race to find clues? Yes please!

Amazing Race

What made my team far superior to the rest of the peasants playing. Well, my team consisted of five well-oiled skateboards and their ambitious riders. This helped. Apart from the fact that riding a skateboard through the centre of Sydney is fraught with danger (like falling off your board into an unsuspecting tourist or into the Sydney river for that matter) it made the race a whole lot faster and a lot less exhausting — meaning that we had time for a few rounds at Hungry Jacks afterwards. Word of advice for future challengers — get skateboards or mopeds. you can't go wrong.

Monday night at College means Variety Hour — and there's plenty of variety. Think seasoned performers, enthusiastic beginners, and a supportive crowd ready to cheer on all who contribute. 2013 has seen some of Avondale's finest take to the stage in fun and inspiring performances.

"I think it's the relaxed atmosphere of Variety Hour that I love the most. Usually performing with groups I have to be sensitive to the overall sound: but with this type of gig I can really let go, be myself and sing the way I want to. It's good because it's in front of people who are so supportive and encouraging."

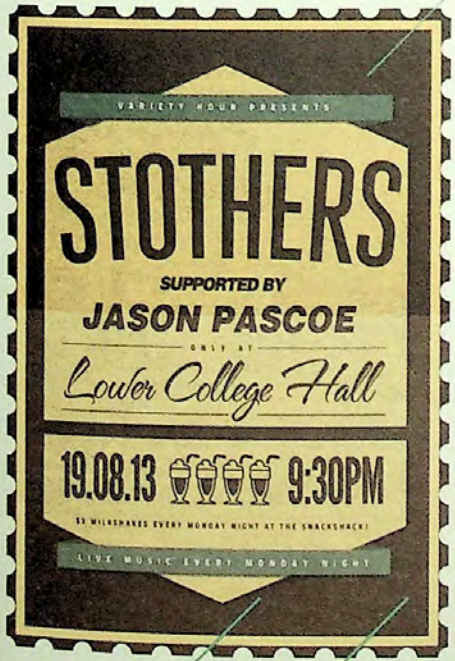

—Emily Thomas

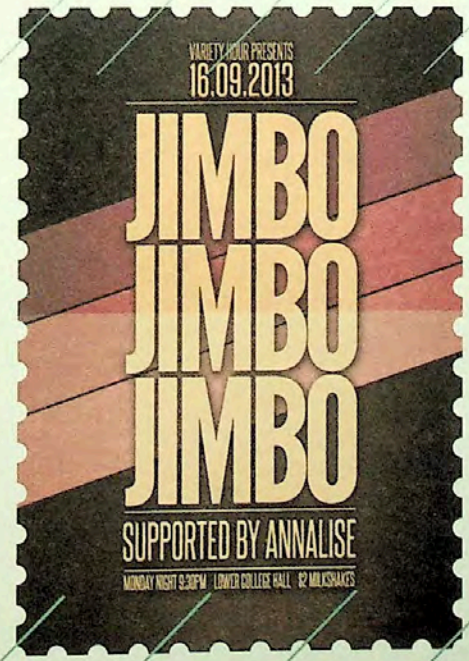

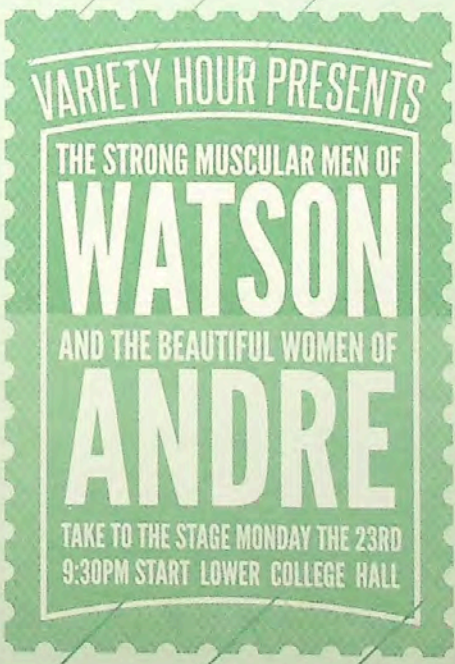

The highlight of the Rez was definitely the atmosphere! Plus, the Rez gives students the opportunity to kick back, enjoy a night of entertainment and fun, and — like the unofficial College motto says — find a wife!

— Kim Ellis

For many indoor students, the annual Rez Banquet is a definite highlight of the year — and this year was no exception. The RAs of Watson, Andre and Ella Halls threw a 1950's Carnival themed event, providing foods and entertainment reminiscent of the festival era. Corn on the cob, hot dogs and chocolate coated bananas were just some of the things on the menu. You can't beat a night like this!

Rez Banquet

This years Rez was the best one yet, the 1950's carnival theme left many costume ideas constantly running through my mind. The night was just as exciting as we had old swing dancing, mini putt putt and a JUMPING CASTLE! Lets just say the night was a classic memory, thats for sure.

—Jorden Tually

I hear nothing!
Can you hear me?

...the dream life without the giant spa baths and free puppies.

Life in girl's dorms this year has been, in two words: beautiful chaos. With welcoming gestures from one dorm to another, to undie runs that nobody admits to being a part of, we have all survived another year and made friends and memories with women that will stand a lifetime.

Living in dorms definitely has its ups and downs — particularly if you are left in a shower cubical with nothing but a bar of soap to walk back to your room with — but the fun and joy of living with such a wonderful group of women outweighs these slight 'inconveniences'. Contrary to popular belief, girls dorms does not just consist of sandwich making and ironing, but of memory making adventures, crafternoons and interactive activities that cover a range of Key Learning Areas.

I look forward to new adventure ideas concocted over late night 'study sessions' and free pile shopping in the coming year.

Andre Hall — halls are literally lined with Bible verses and sayings that promote our spiritual walk. It's great to wake up and walk out of your dorm room to such blessings. I also value our worships. There are always interesting and challenging topics designed to encourage our sense of identity in Christ. This year it was great to get a small group going amongst the Halls, (Ella, Andre, and Watson) to study deeper into the power of the Holy Spirit. I have loved growing spiritually in dorms.

>> Sam's Piece in the Puzzle.

The first thing I learnt about Sam Davidson was that he enjoyed setting people up. Within the first five minutes of my first college social, he had attempted to set me up with every girl at the table, as well as a couple of the guys. Little did I realise then the amount of impact that Sam would have not only on my own life, but also on the rest of Avondale.

If you had to describe Sam in one word, it would be 'involved'. Since starting at Avondale in 2010, Sam has taken on a role in just about every College group you could think of — SAC, College Church worship, Basketball, weekly small groups, the 'Scripture in Schools' initiative, Pick-a-street, and running nightly Watson Hall prayer sessions in room 117. But it isn't just groups that Sam is involved in — he's involved in people's lives, too.

"I would say that I'm most passionate about building community, especially when I get to see new friendships develop," he says. "I think the world generally overlooks people in the busyness of life, and people don't get openly and honestly affirmed."

"I try to affirm people each and every day, because it might be the only positive thing they get to hear."

And in case Sam's affirming nature wasn't enough, this Port Macquarie boy's passion for activity is unparalleled. Surfing, long boarding, and long-distance running are just some of his hard-to-hide talents; as well as the occasional attempt at karaoke. But despite all the things he's done while at College, Sam claims the best part is friends he's gotten to know.

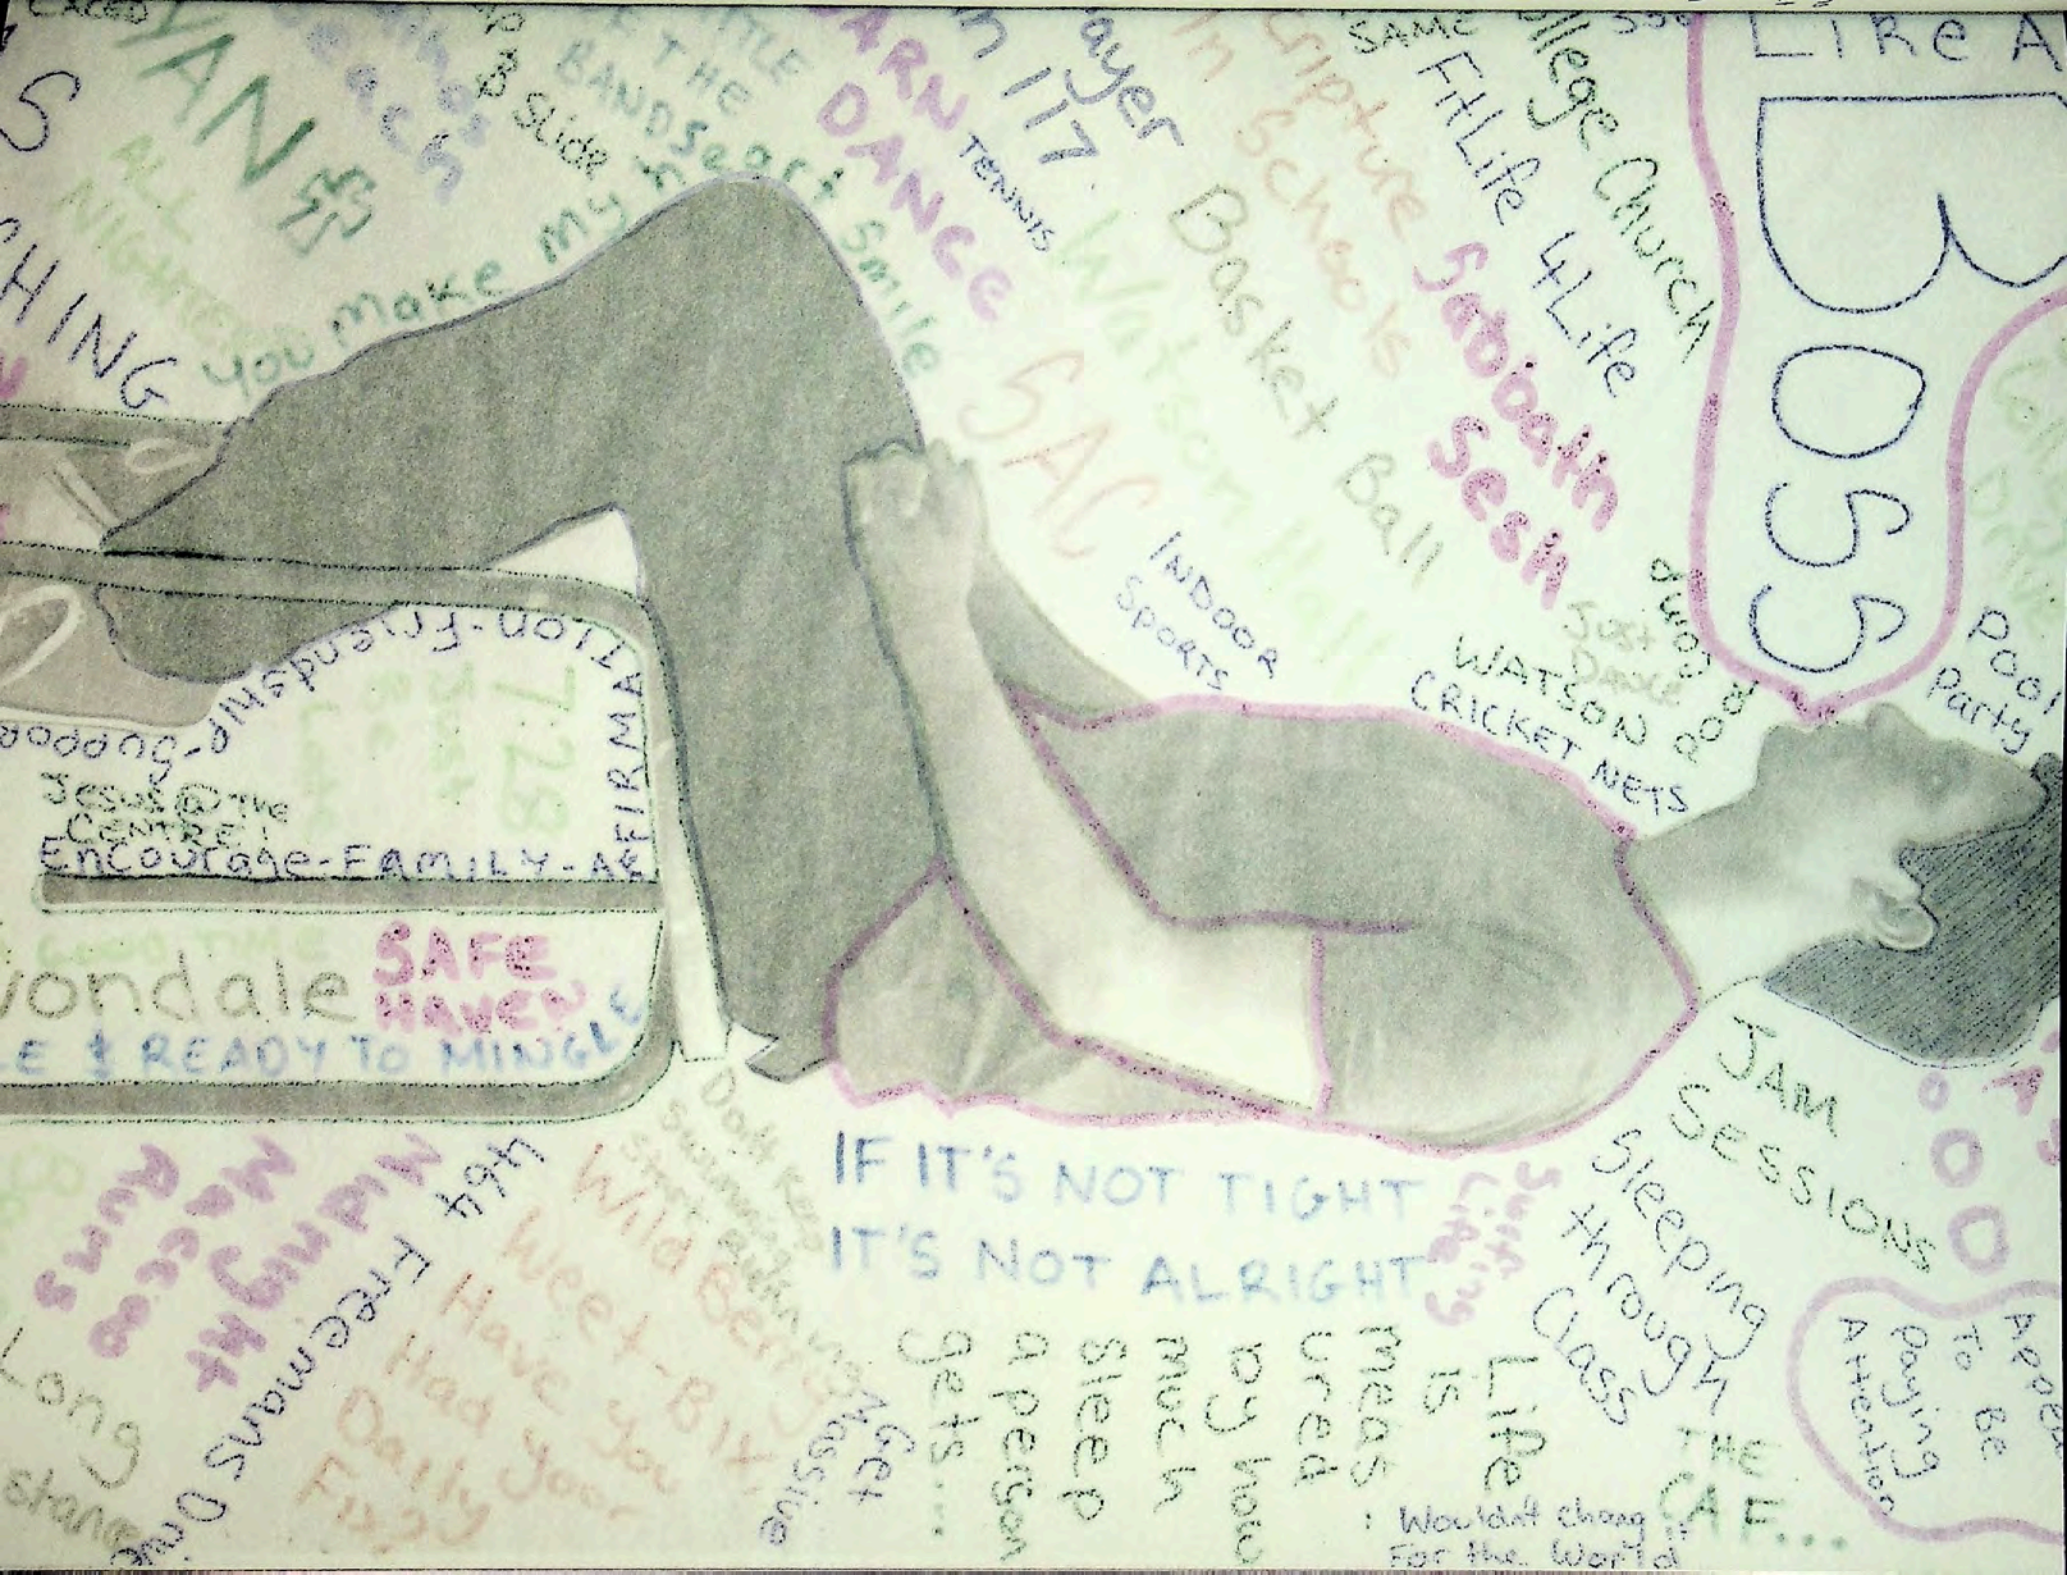

"My favourite thing about Avondale would be that it has become home. When I first moved here, I didn't know anyone. But four years later it's like a safe haven. I love that I get to be blessed by peoples smiles, affirmations and kindnesses, each and every day."

And the mark he wants to leave? Well, that's easy.

"My mark is not one of achievement, not one that will ever be up on a plaque. But I still think you can have a lasting legacy without that recognition. I guess my mark would be the smiles on peoples faces — I'll be happy if that's what I get to leave behind."

Chaffs

This is a word that seems almost exclusive to Avondale. When you mention the recent happenings to an off campus companion, they will often look back at you with an eye brow raised asking, "what the heck is a chaff?" No one knows directly where this word has come from, though many have claimed to be the founder of the term.

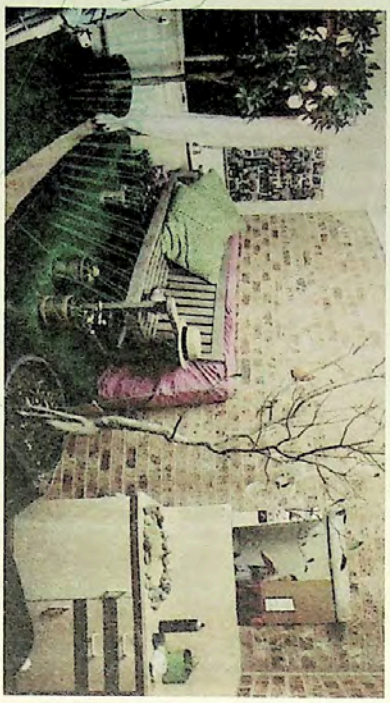

But the foundation of the term isn't the important part of this great tradition — the important part is the fact that it is a tradition. First year students come to college with grand expectations of chaffs, as they have heard the legends being passed down from generation to generation, and they feel it is their duty to continue this great legacy.

As with any great legacy or tradition, there has been people who have tainted it with their own sentiments. It's becasue of that the term "chaff" has become somewhat of a dirty word around college. Unfortunately as time moves forward so do the restrictions that are put in place in most institutions. At Avondale it was once acceptable to "raid" or enter girls/guys dorms and chaff until the heart was content.

In these modern times this is no longer acceptable and something that Avondale is trying to stop. Having been here for the last four years and I have seen and heard of chaffs that don't violate people's right for safety and which remain consistent with the sentiment of the generation before us. And that sentiment was good kind natured fun, which was not at the expense of individuals.

So my advice for all those continuing on in their Avondale experience is to take up the mantle of our past generations and the spirit in which they chaffed.

Dorm Life Boys

ball is life

I genuinely feel for those people who come to college and have never really played basketball. One can easily watch their transient attitudes towards the game change over the first few semesters of college. They resist in their first semester thinking that the game isn't for them and that they don't need basketball.

Eventually though they find their calling to the game for either a fun night with friends or to try and ascend the ladder to glory. History has always been characterised by its heroes and its villains, and Avondale basketball is no exception.

On any given Tuesday or Wednesday night one can witness the show-down between these heroes and villains taking place between the hours of 7-10pm. People will be chanting, yelling, screaming and videoing in the hopes of catching just a snippet of the magic that happens out on the court.

Whether you play for pride and bragging rights over your competition in A grade, or you play for shenanigans and good times in D grade, your time at college would not be complete without a semester or two in the Avondale Basketball Association.

—Mitchell Gates

Basketball

Life is full of glorious moments. Birth, first day of school, license, graduation, wedding, children, retirement, but nothing as glorious and as satisfactory as running onto the basketball court on a Tuesday or Wednesday night to the cheers of a multitude of procrastinating college students.

If playing basketball is not your spiritual gift and you have accepted this, perhaps coaching a team, benching a game or joining that wild procrastinating cheer squad that has become almost as competitive as the Miss Universe pageant has been your best basketball experience this year. For this support, we salute you.

With the finals over and free iPads given away for another year we have the opportunity to reflect on some of our finer moments as teams, 'athletes' and friends; and prepare to come back bigger and better next season with more extravagant outfits, shoes and (potentially) skill.

It never ceases to amaze me how one sport can bring everybody together, and I look forward to seeing it grow and continue to develop in our College and community.

>> Gina's Piece in the Puzzle.

Romans 8:38

Asked to describe herself in three words, she appears tongue-tied — quite a rare occurrence. Sitting on a bench outside Bethel Hall and fiddling with her keycard, she contemplates the answer. "I feel like there should be three epic words, but I can't think of anything!" she says.

Possibly the only human being at Avondale without a mobile phone, Gina Al-Ali is hard to track down. "It got stolen... on a train from Sydney to Melbourne," she explains.

Born into a multicultural family, Gina's dad is Syrian (hence the cool surname), while her mum is Lebanese. Perhaps predictably, then, she loves falafels — although not so much at the Caf. "You can't call it tabouli when it's just cous cous," she says, before confessing she's not a great cook either.

At any given mealtime, you can expect to find her in the Caf in the midst of a discussion, or perhaps leading it. However, she's not always an extrovert. Gina says she's known as the Grandma in dorms because she's sensible — "I think I have a good sense of judgement" — and goes to bed early.

She talks of teaching, where she believes the best way to motivate students is by "having high expectations of them." Her passion for teaching is clear, and she opens up on the importance of nurturing students. "I was always the one that got average grades, so I just slipped between the cracks," she says, relating to her own experience at school. "You were either the smart one or the one that got told off. I think you need to make time for all your students."

Gina reflects on some tougher times: moving schools on multiple occasions, and dealing with the separation of her parents. "I saw it coming for ages," she says. "But I knew we were all better off — everyone was happier."

The tough times made her stronger, and it's clear her spirituality played an integral role. "I can't imagine not having a faith. I can't see how people don't have hope in something else. What are you on this earth for?"

And it's something she takes seriously: "Having a relationship with your creator — it's not something you acknowledge and then just ignore. If you really love someone, you're not just going to talk to them once a month, you're going to try and talk to them whenever you can."

Gina takes life as it comes, without too much planning ahead. "I'll just go where the wind takes me — the 'wind' being God."

Eventually, she settles on the three-word description of herself: "candid, sociable and optimistic."

Spot on.

God — the corner pieces, the structure of the Avondale puzzle. For isn't that what sets us apart from any other tertiary education institution? God, in every aspect of our lives. God as our Father, our Saviour, our Redeemer, our friend. God who reveals Himself to us through the friendships we make and the laughter we share, through Festival of Faith and 7:28. Jesus as the centre of our story, creating masterpieces out of each of us.

Excerpt from 'Polim', winner of the Signs Publishing Award Chelsea MMitchell

You are volunteering in Cambodia in a van turned medical clinic, under a tree. A young woman comes in. She is 20, and tiny. She is touching her chest, and by the time she reaches you, her swelling lips have turned blue. You feel her abdomen, and her heart is so enlarged that you feel like it is pounding outside of her body — now your heart is pounding too. You take her to the one place in the entire country that offers surgery.

She waits 10 days - so you wait 10 days.

In that time, she goes downhill, seemingly dying before your eyes. She is coughing — blood fills her lungs. Her mother is holding onto you, begging you to "please, please, please help".

Meet Polim — the girl who had blue lips.

Hiding Secrets

by Lawson Hull

Are we hiding secrets from God?
While holding a straight face
Wonder why He won't give us the world
What kind of games do we play with God?

God's not the one you can throw in the air
And expect to come down
He's found everywhere
He's nobodies' man, He's nobodies' man
He's got premonitions I don't understand
But he places the answers in the palm of my hand
I don't take the time to consider them

If we were honest with God,
we'd be standing next to Him...
Are we hiding secrets from God?
While holding a straight face
Wonder why He won't give us the world
What kind of games do we play with God?

He's given me chances I often forget
Then I winder why things haven't happened yet
I'm such a pain: He's got to deal with
But He's better than that, He's got a heart
And He holds my face up, up to the sun
And He talks to me, like I am one

How he loves us so, take a chance on that...

Are we hiding secrets from God?
While holding a straight face
Wonder why He won't give us the world

What kind of games do we play with God?

I was inspired to write "Hiding Secrets" when I found myself being dishonest with God. It's not like He didn't know what was going on in my life; but He wanted me to be real with Him. I believe honesty, along with faith and love, is all God asks from us. Whenever I sing this song - it's a commitment.

Festival of Faith

(Semester One)

Dedicating a week every semester to an intensive celebration of our faith is part of what makes Avondale so beautifully unique. There's power in prayer, strength in fellowship and encouragement in community.

Festival of Faith is such a beautiful opportunity to remember that God is all we need.
- Anna Beaden

"When I stand before God at the end of my life, I would hope that I would not have a single bit of talent left, and could say, 'I used everything You gave me.'"

— Erma Bombeck

On a pale blue dot suspended in the vastness of space, we find ourselves immersed in one enormous picture, in which to find our place.

Take a look at your life — what is it that makes you count in this existence? Generations come and go, what has been done will be done again, and those who are yet to come will not be remembered by those who follow them. Life goes on as we fade away. Yet in all of this, we are presented with the choice and the opportunity to commit to God. So I ask you, when we dedicate our existence to the glory of God, do we attain significance? Absolutely.

"Each of you should use whatever gift you have received to serve others..." (1 Peter 4:10). With our various talents and abilities, we come together to form the complete body of Christ, a body that will do everything for the glory of God. We are called to be the light of the world, that shines like a city on a hill; we cannot possibly dig a hole in the ground and bury what God has given us — the gift itself is designed to be given away, not preserved.

Ponder for a moment what this might look like in action. I envision a community that lives and breathes the mission statement of Jesus while He was on earth. I envision a community that loves the Lord will all their heart, soul, mind and strength; a community that will give everything they have in order to love the people around them as they would love themselves.

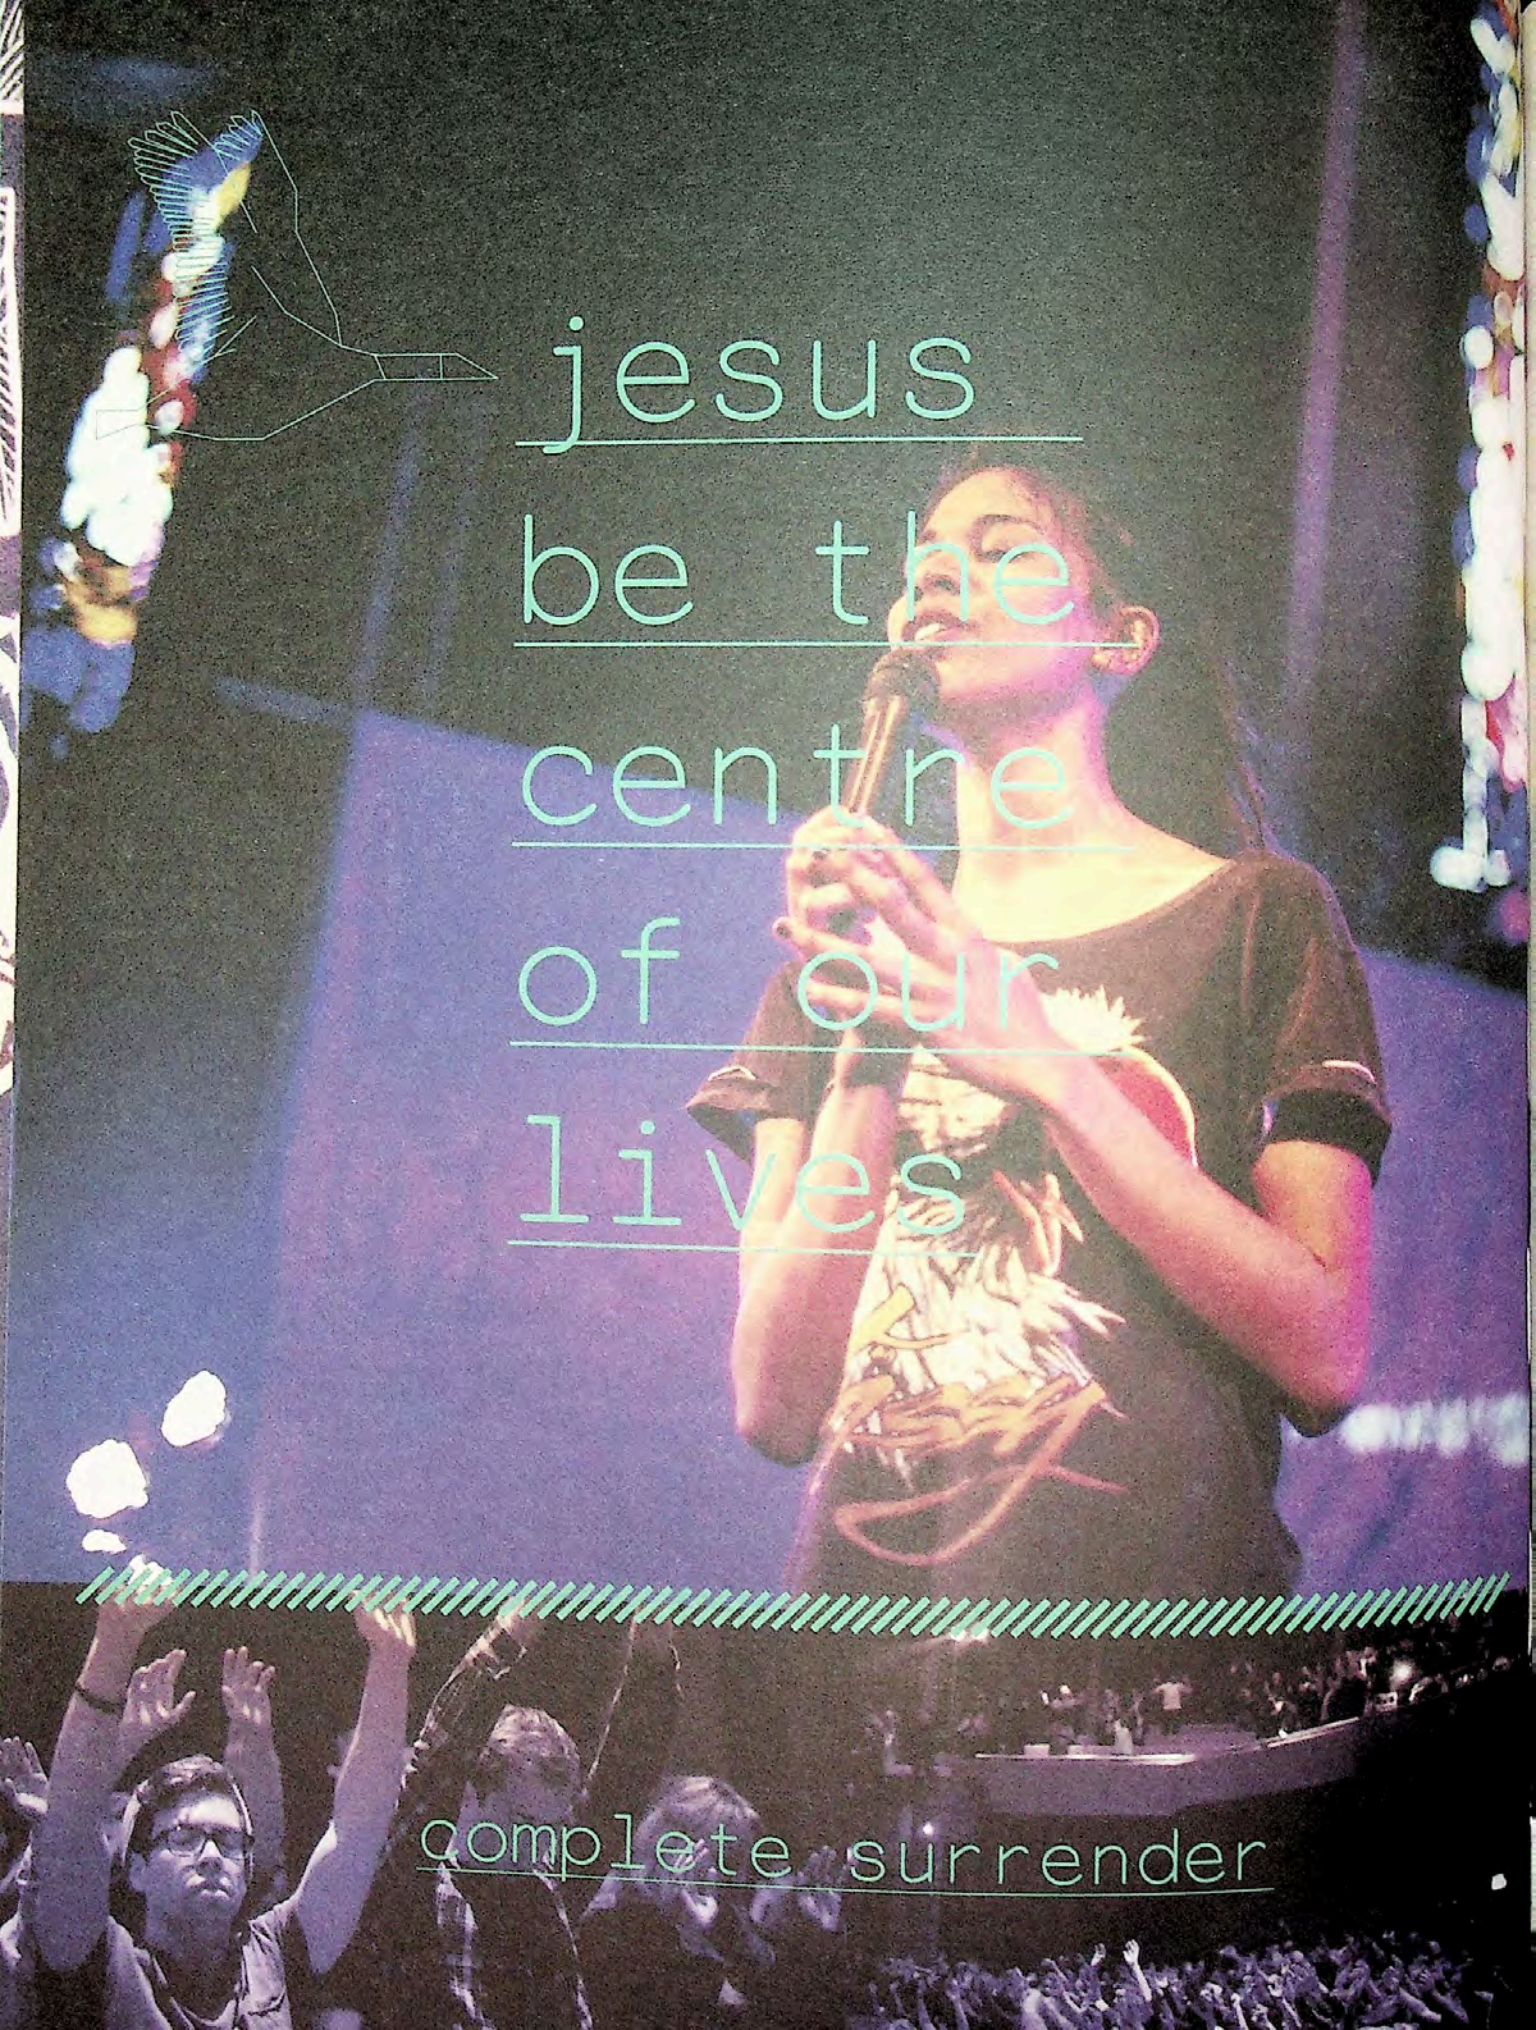

Significant? You bet. "Let nothing move you. Always give yourselves fully to the work of the Lord, because you know that your labour is not in vain" (1 Cor 15:58).

In a community that gives itself fully to the work of God and to the benefit of others, I envision a time where we count everything as loss in comparison to knowing and gaining Christ.

I sincerely hope for the day when we can stand before God and say "I have nothing left; I used everything You gave me."

What does this look like in YOUR life?

Festival Of Faith

(Semester Two)

Having the opportunity to be apart of Festival of Faith was a huge and humbling experience. It's a time where you not only get to minister to the community, but get to fellowship

There are several ways to reach out, and dance is one that I've been able to use for ministry. Dance allows you to convey a story through your expressions, the way you move and the way you feel the music, in hope that it will capture at least one person out there watching you. Bringing someone else closer to God through this a double blessing.

Working as a group was also a blessing for me. Just knowing that we were all accountable for each other was a blessing ss was reminding ourselves that our dance was a ministry to God for Him to use for his own will.

Whatever your talents are — singing, drama, leading out or praying for others using it to glorify God is the best gift you could give back to Him. However, don't forget that this is not for you or me to boast about. In meekness praise and glorify Him for everything that he has done and will continue to do in your life.

Be Blessed.

One love.

—Darlene Mene

Life spinning 360°
on an axis of impossibility.

If I were to mention words like 'obsession' or 'possession' it would only bring to mind negative connotations and that's not what I mean.
Yet to me, it is exactly how it seems:

My God. The Creator. Of everything, everywhere died on a cross, one that I didn't have to share and though what He did then was supremely important
what He's doing now — I lose all sense of decorum.

Life spinning 360°
on an axis of God.
Created in His image, possessing His Spirit
Jesus, centre of my existence.

Bible verses and rituals they're mere expressions of His will.
But underneath my skin, inside my bones
this heart of this here person, here He calls home.

In my blood and in my veins
I am a reflector of His name.
We-God breathing people
His possession and His praise.

My DNA is coded to the Creator's credit.
My actions intentional, because I have read it — my name in His book has my veins pulsing with purpose.
He has claimed me as His.

Don't ask me when, why or how —
If it wasn't for Him, I wouldn't have the strength to stand right now.
Knowing your life has been touched and changed by Jesus,

Jesus at the centre of your faith? Don't pray for more-
Pray for opportunities where that faith can open doors.

Open your eyes to where that faith can lead you.
Jesus is interested in their small stuff, he might need you to say to that mountain "Get out of my way!"
He is the difference, the centre of your faith.

God can do more with my significance than with my success.
So I hand Him over more than the best
I hand Him my mistakes too.

Every word that should have gone unsaid every memory I have wished remain dead-everything. I don't want to miss.
I make Jesus centre of my significance.

I want to smell like sheep. I want to search and rescue the underdog.
I don't want a reputation for being that gospel hog.
This isn't a place for spiritual hocus pocus.
This is where we decide to make Jesus centre of our focus.

Life spinning 360° on an axis of God.
When you make Him your centre, you just need to nod.
"Yes Lord, I'll face the battle. Yes Lord, I'll spread your news
Yes Lord, I don't understand right now, but I'm choosing to trust in you.
I will stand as your name bearer and I'll try to do what's right.
Jesus, centre of my battle? Well, it's you they'll have to fight."

Jesus. My God. Creator of everything, everywhere
died on a cross, one that I didn't have to share.
And though what He did then is supremely important
What He's doing now, I lose all sense of decorum.

>> Michael's Piece in the Puzzle.

Michael Lilikakis has a reputation — a good reputation, that is.

Some would call him the college eccentric, a title he claims with gusto. Long-haired, walking with a wolf cane, often seen talking in funny accents or simply far too loudly for the circumstances; people know him as "Lilikakis", or for his mischievous munchkins, "Tattush".

Eccentricities aside, Michael's life has consisted of far more than just his Avondale experience. Before coming to college, he played First Division soccer in Europe, and ran a training club for goalkeepers. But despite all this, Michael feels it has been here at Avondale that he has been able to make him mark, both in college life and the world at large.

For Michael, Avondale has been a journey of discovery — a discovery that it is alright to question what you believe, to explore why you believe these ideas, and to keep learning within and beyond the academic sphere. 'Preconceived notions' are also something Michael is trying to tackle — notions which are not only present in academia, but in the way people treat each other in everyday life.

"The truth is, everyone's trying to find an identity. I believe that God's had me doing that for quite some time, trying to help people establish and find themselves. It doesn't happen by just having little chinwags or cursory wavings or glances at people, as we do: it's about spending time with them, establishing relationships."

It's these relationships — and the fun that goes with them — that Michael wants to be known for.

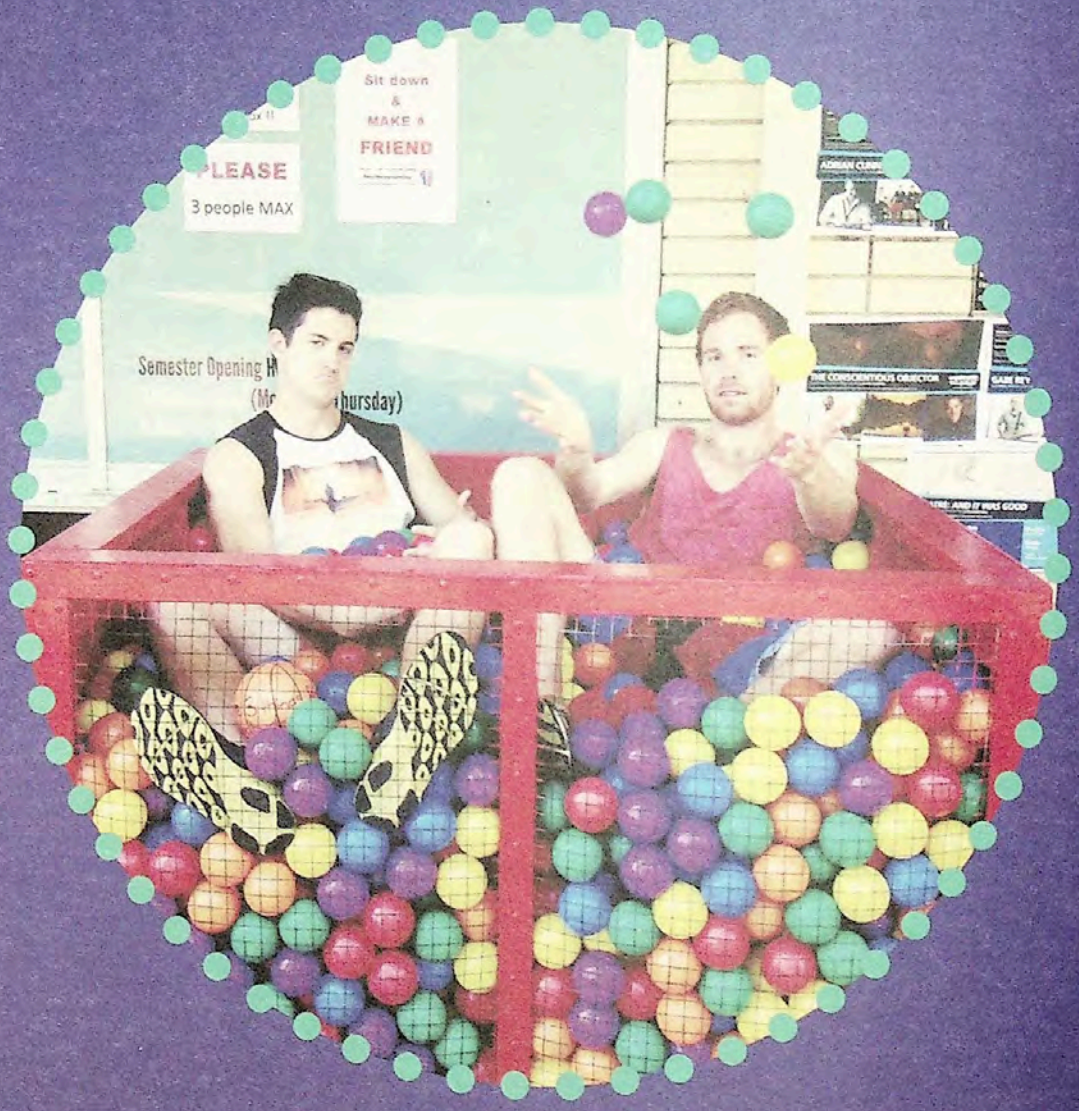

"Spike Milligan put on his tombstone as his epitaph, 'Told you I was sick!'. That's the sort of thing I want to leave behind - that the name Lilikakis is synonymous with someone having a smiley face. And you can smile for different reasons. You can smile because I've been a pain in the backside, and you can smile because I've impacted your life in a positive way, so that's what I want to leave behind. Not a legacy, just a belief that, "Hey, this dude made me smile."

And smile we do.

SERVICE

A puzzle piece is purposeless on it's own. But put it together with others, contributing what it has to offer the world, and the full picture emerges. Without service, without giving of our time and talents, the Avondale puzzle would never be complete. ONE Mission, COSMOS, STORM Co — everything from weeks overseas to mowing lawns in our own neighbourhood. Service-because puzzles depend on giving and receiving to make something beautiful from our lives.

One Mission Vanuatu

You don't tend to forget experiences that change your life. I sat around a table with some of my One Mission team members one still, humid afternoon on Atchin Island, Vanuatu. This isolated little speck of land had become our home for two weeks in February 2013, and it was getting towards the end of our stay. As we sat sprawled around the table fighting the heat, someone picked up an old, battered hymn book originally from the local church and began to hum a tune. Before long we were all happily belting out many old favourites, and the local ladies hovering around began to edge closer. Soon they joined our circle, and began singing in Bislama. They ended up teaching us the chorus of "When the Roll is Called up Yonder" in their dialect, and we sang it at a concert before we left the island.

So what was left to do on a quiet, sweaty afternoon on a little island in the South Pacific Deepen friendships, build each other up, learn from each other and praise God together — that's what. Experiencing the simplicity of relationships and existence on Atchin Island that day allowed me to refocus on the very essence of what life should be about. Every time I remember, I am able to reset my perspective.

—Sarah Ryan

One Mission Cambodia

Known for it's ancient ruins, killing fields and extremely versatile climate, Cambodia has been on my bucket list ever since I can remember.

This country has been life changing. Learning about the horrible stuff that has happened throughout Cambodia's history, didn't really affect me until I came face to face with the reality of its ongoing effects. There are small children on the streets, houses that flood and literally fall apart every time the rain hits. There is a rising need for orphanages and an ongoing need for proper education and medical services. These people go without the essential things that I take for granted every day.

The most impacting part of our trip happened when our team visited a village school in Phnom Penn. After a morning full of singing songs, playing games, face painting and becoming a literal human climbing tree, we served the children lunch. I saw a little girl struggling to hold her spoon and eat by herself, so I went over and picked up her tray to help her. I know how hard it usually is when kids refuse to eat or demand something different to what has been put on their plate. All this girl had to eat was some overcooked rice and a small amount of curry that wasn't very appetizing. With tears running down my face, I had to add water from my drink bottle to the rice in order to break it up for her. With a look of thankfulness filling her eyes, she ate everything on her tray.

She'll never know how much of my perspective she has changed. I don't know when her next meal will be or what her future will bring her, but she will always be on my prayer list.

One Mission Auction Night

The goal was to raise $1000 for a One Mission leadership budget, to help support the team leaders who make Avondale's mission trips happen. By the end of the second annual 'Concert for a Cause', more than $3000 had been raised, and over 140 people had showed up to support the group. A number of different bands performed in the concert, including Manifest award winners Lawson Hull and Anna Beadon, the Costigan sisters, and the student group 'Jackie Chan and the Mi Goreng Police'. The auction-a-date segment proved popular, too; with the highest auction being Holly Phillips, for $700. The money was used to help One Mission reach their target of facilitating trips for one hundred students in 100.

Concert for a Cau

"It's a relief - we passed all expectations, and tripled the amount we've raised in previous years. I'm really excited about how these funds are going to help with One Mission."

—Bek Eyre

"It was really good to see the support from College, and just to see everyone's passion. That's why I love One Mission - the passion is what keeps everyone going."

ACADEMIC

You know those pieces in your puzzle called 'studying' and 'classes' and 'exams'? Some say they're the reason we all come to Avondale in the first place (which may or may not be true). One thing's for sure — these academic pieces aren't always the plain and boring ones like you'd think. There's plenty of colour and surprises in these pieces that make up such a great percentage of our Avondale lives.

...a trip that I will never forget

History of Art & Design Tour

Who can honestly say that they were able to go to Europe for a class. An actual class. Who knew class could be so much fun?

This year we went to three different countries across 17 days. The trip was a total success and we were very lucky no one was pick pocketed!

To have the ability to stand where famous artists such as Van Gogh stood to create their works, to see what they saw, and then to experience their works... nothing will ever compare!

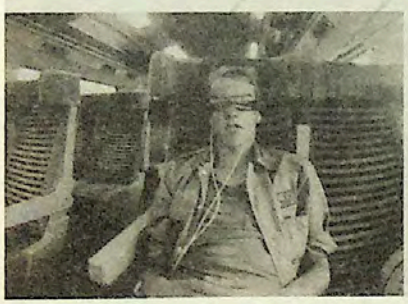

Like so many others who have travelled overseas I have caught the travel bug.

Thanks to all who attended the trip. I had such an amazing time with you all. Donna & Andy thanks for putting up with us and looking after us, thank you for bringing us home safely to our families. Grace our tour manager, this trip wouldn't have been the same without you: you deserve the biggest thanks of all for making our trip a reality.

The Promise

The highlight of the music department this year? The rebranding as the Avondale Conservatorium would definitely be up there. But that's not the only thing that has changed for music at Avondale in 2013. The old music hall was given a makeover, with new floors and offices to match the cool new name. Plus the launch concert at Homecoming, a performance of Karl Jenkins "The Armed Man", was a moving and heartfelt experience for performers and listeners alike.

That Design

That Design is a student run Graphic Design studio on Avondale College Lake Macquarie campus. The studio is run by the final year Graphic Design students.

I have had the opportunity this year to be traffic manager of the That Design studio. I am in charge of keeping tabs on the work load undertaken by the studio. As we are a fully operational design studio we work for clients such as Signs Publishing (who actually did a fantastic job printing this lovely book you have in your hands) as well as other clients that engage us to do work for them. This opportunity of giving and taking briefs from real world clients doesn't happen everywhere which is what makes Avondale's graphic design pathway so special. For a full year, every project we undertake is a job that allows us to gain professional insight into the Graphic Design world. Everyone in the design team has a role to play — we each work together on every job and help each other out when needed. We are a team that fits perfectly together like one big puzzle.

I just really want to take this time to say how amazing this year has been for me. The girls in my design class this year have been an inspiration (and sometimes, when needed, my rock. If it were not for them I wouldn't have found my place in Avondale's puzzle. Countless hours of work have been put into this Jacaranda you are holding and there is no way it would have been possible with out the team of designers and our lecturers Donna Pinter and Kristine Lubinski.

From the central coast, comes Chelsea Mitchell, a vivacious girl who always has a smile on her face and one foot on her scooter.

Spontaneous, fun-loving, and a self-admitted procrastinator, Chelsea can usually be heard before she can be seen. Friends say that she has more laughs than they can count, and invents new ones every day; but that they can always tell which laugh is hers and what each one means. And the strong ties of friendship are mutual. "The girls that have become my sisters - they're my favourite thing about Avondale," Chelsea says.

If you can tell a person by their career choice, then Chelsea is one to watch - with a passion for humanitarian issues, Chelsea and her International Development Studies major are going places. So far her trips have taken her to Nepal, India, Cambodia, Laos and Vanuatu; volunteering with aid organisations such as the Adventist Development and Relief Agency (ADRA). Her favourite areas to work in are issues of women's empowerment; giving women other options to provide for themselves and their families than the degrading situations of sex slavery many find themselves in.

"I really believe in empowering people, rather than just going in and giving money. I believe that we need to empower people to change. When you go see that in the villages, it's actually amazing to see what they themselves are capable of."

"I really love writing, and using it to tell people's stories. I want to give them a voice and let others hear it, and to ultimately give a voice to the voiceless."

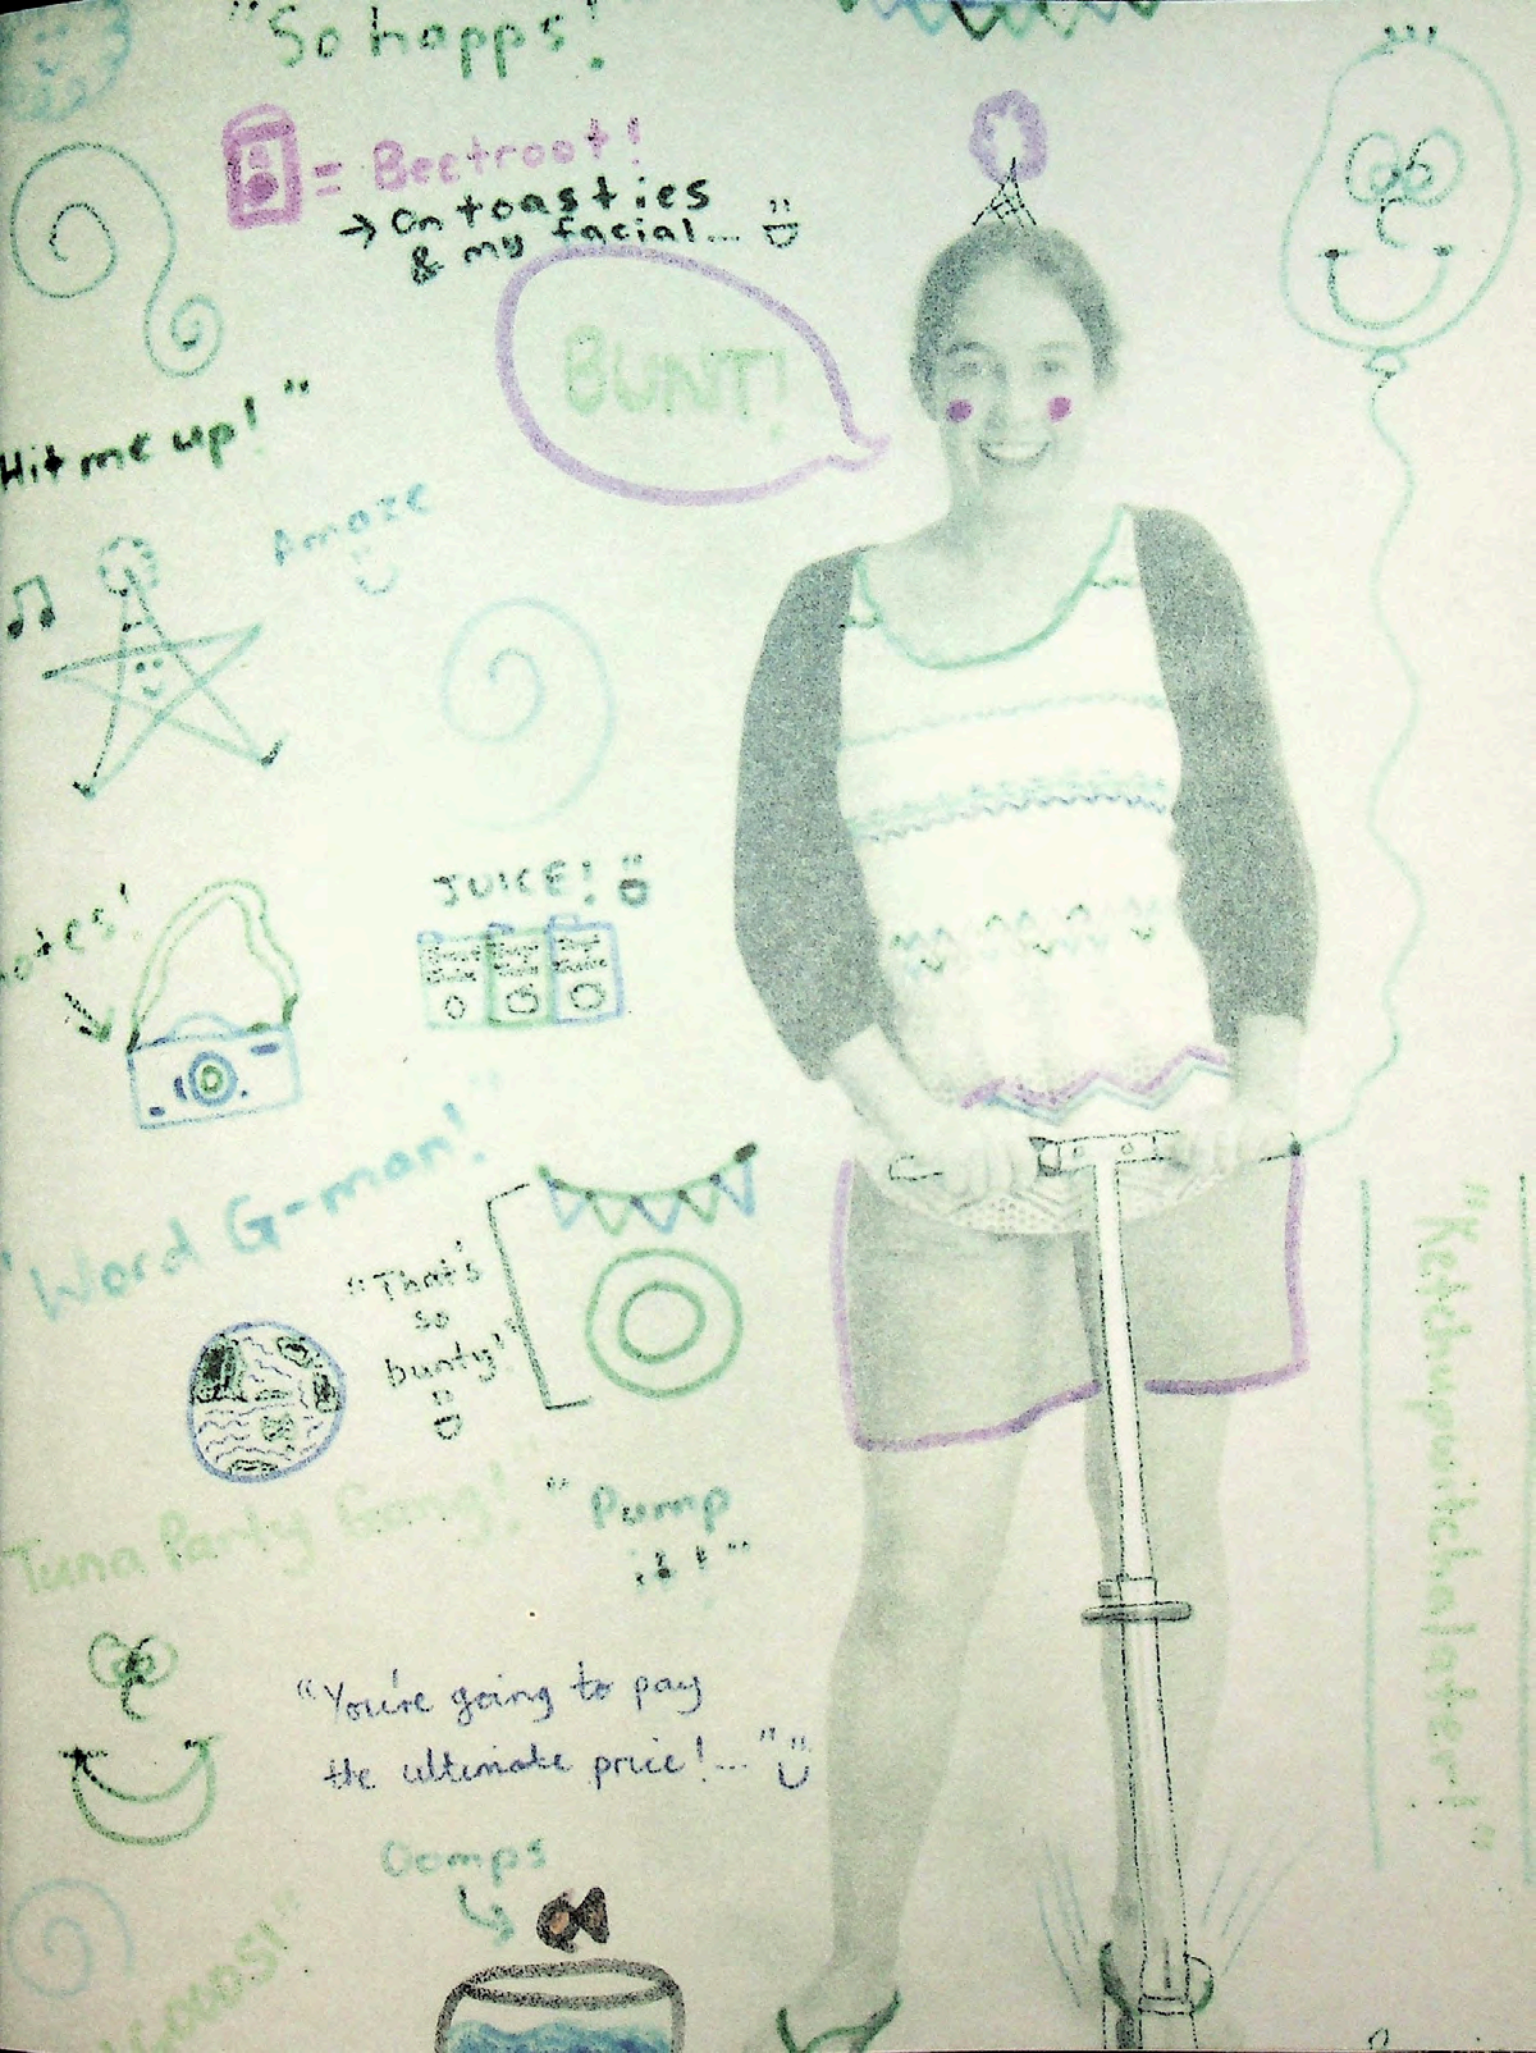

It isn't just people overseas that Chelsea has a passion for. With a bubbly personality and a great reluctance to talk about herself, Chelsea is one of the most other-centered people you'll meet. In her own words, "relationships are, legit, the greatest blessings of life."

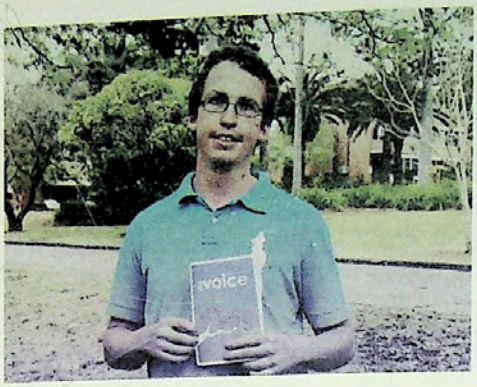

"I'm passionate about passions, if that makes any sense at all. I'm in love with people's stories, how they use their passions, and their journey to finding what their passion is. And I love how we've all got different ones, and how God uses that. No matter what it is. Like tattoos for example: if you're passionate about tattoos, it can be used to reach people who otherwise couldn't be reached. Really, I just love people. I could sit and listen to them talk all day long about who they are and what they love."

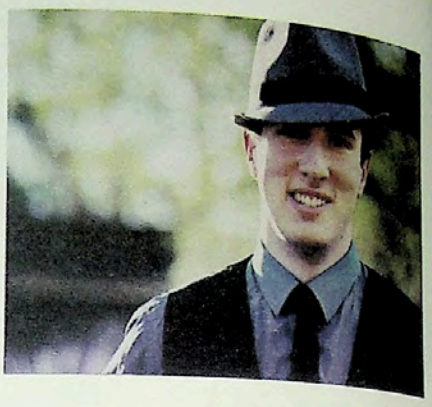

If there's any mark that Chelsea will leave behind, it will be her passion for the people around her. Legit.

I would recommend anyone who is studying at the ABS to consider undertaking an internship or some form of practical experience. It enables you to put what you have learnt in class into practice and develop your professional business skills.

—Luke Ferry

As part of my study at the Avondale Business School during first semester, I carried out a research project looking at the effects social media can have on a business's reputation and finances. As a result of the project, I put together a framework that can be used to formulate a comprehensive social media policy. While researching the topic, it was interesting to see how influential social media can be on a business, and to note that many of Australia's largest organisations do not have a policy to minimise the risk posed by social media. Doing this research paper furthered my studies at the Avondale Business School by providing the opportunity to see how social media policies help to protect a business's reputation. The project also taught me the elements which are most vital to formulate an effective, risk-reducing social media policy.

—Matthew Romero

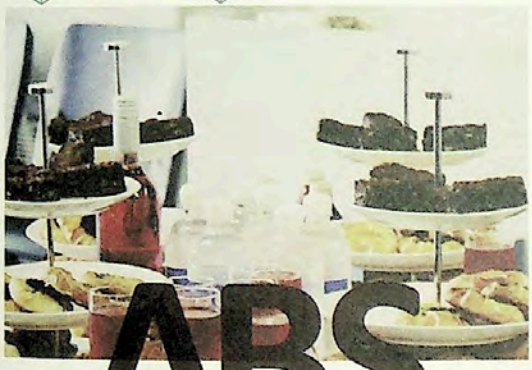

One of my final subjects this year was to research a marketing topic of my choice and write up the results in a report. I chose to research the reasons students choose to study at Avondale College and the potential implications for marketing. To collect the data, I asked students to complete a survey that I composed. According to my results, the most important reason students choose to study at Avondale are that the college offers the course they wish to study, closely followed by the fact that Avondale is associated with potential employment opportunities within the church organisation. Being a Seventh Day Adventist institution and having a low student/staff ratio are also important to many students.

For me, this was a great experience in collecting market research first-hand and brainstorming what strategies might be used to communicate with current and potential students.

Business

ABS

Avondale Business School

In the first semester of 2013, the Business School relaunched itself as the Avondale Business School (ABS). The students were a great help and the event was a great success!

We try to make our mark on each year that we live through, but 2013 has made its mark on me. For me, I had to drive down to Sydney every week for 12 hours of work. Turns out, my internship has been much better than I ever thought it could be. Sure, some days I am just a run around person "Take this here" "Drop this to Doctor so and so", but the experience my internship at Sydney Adventist Hospital has given me will help me so much more in the future when I have a 'real' job.

Each week is comprised of tasks ranging from marketing to communications to event management. It has been so great to see how each part of a business interconnects and depends on another. The things I had studied were super helpful, as I understood tasks easily and was able to produce a quality of work acceptable to the standard of the organisation.

Avondale Business School has done a fantastic job in equipping me with skills ready for the work force and also guiding me through my internship. For me, 2013 has been a year of hard work and learning, but in my life it will also be known as the year I became a marketer.

Education MOTO Nepal

MOTO Nepal was the hardest, yet most amazing experience of my life. Kind of an oxymoron really, but how else do you describe a trip like this. It takes an hour to walk up a mountain to school, to teach children with no English whatsoever, but when you see their smiles as you spin them round, their sorry eyes as you send them out of the classroom or outstretched, Arms reaching for your hand, it's an unforgettable experience.

As teachers, our goal is to impact a child in a way that affects their life. How do you do that in 3 short weeks? (Well, they felt like long weeks, but it sure did go fast!) You love them and have fun with them. These beautiful children created the challenges, but they also made them worth it. My time spent in Nepal was an experience I will never forget.

—Mikaela Campbell

After teaching, we got to hike to Annapurna Base Camp. There were many adventures and funny moments from the trip, which included going to the hospital (and finding out there was nothing wrong with me), falling down a hillside into a thorn bush during a soccer game, and walking in rain all day for several days to finally get to Base Camp at over 4000 metres above sea level.

Overall MOTO Nepal was an awesome experience that I got to share with other awesome Avondale students. If you haven't done a MOTO/Mission trip at Avondale, get onto it!

—Luke Metz

3 weeks of teaching in a rural Nepalese village. A challenging but awesome experience!

Go on a mission trip, they said. It will be spiritually uplifting, they said.

"The kids will love you! They'll be excited to soak up every word, to play every game, and to smile for every photograph. You will gain a new perspective from impacting the lives of these people."

And as you go along, you'll find yourself saying things like "wow, they do such a great job with the little they have" and "seeing the way that they live just makes me want to help them!" and you'll be tempted to gush to everyone you meet about how much of a world changer you are.

For the love of realism, and in the words of Lara, STAHP!

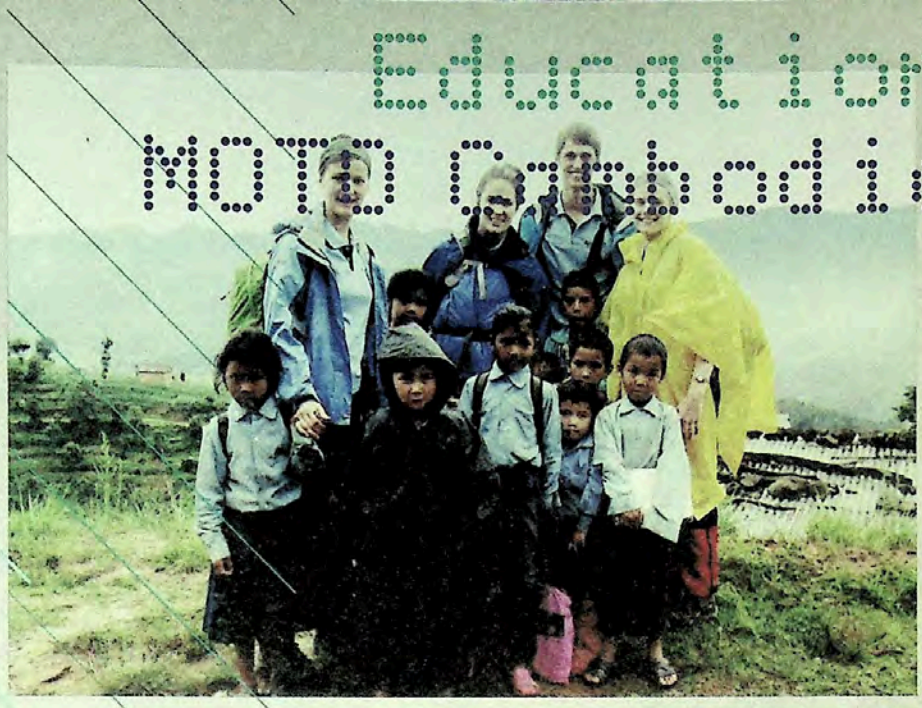

It's easy to take the usual 'I'm a hero' view of outreach trips, but the reality is that while you may have learnt a lot of lessons, you won't have 'fixed' everything. So during (and after) your experience, please refrain from the following expletives:

If you appreciate your time on a mission trip, limit the 'I went on this trip to bless them, but they have blessed me' phrase. It may be true, but demonstrating this in your life is better than just talking about it.

- You haven't 'really impacted their lives' — you've been a bit of fun. Or possibly a bit of a nuisance, if you're teaching.
- 'They have so little, but they are so happy'. Right back atcha white boy destined for mortgages and repayments on all the stuff you don't own!
- 'I gave them a balloon/ paddle pop stick/piece of dirt and they were so happy! Wow.' Yes. Wow. Every child of four is happy with a stick.
- Finally, 'I'm just glad that we can 'give back'' is never an ideal word choice. Be humble in your service.

—Charlotte O'Neil

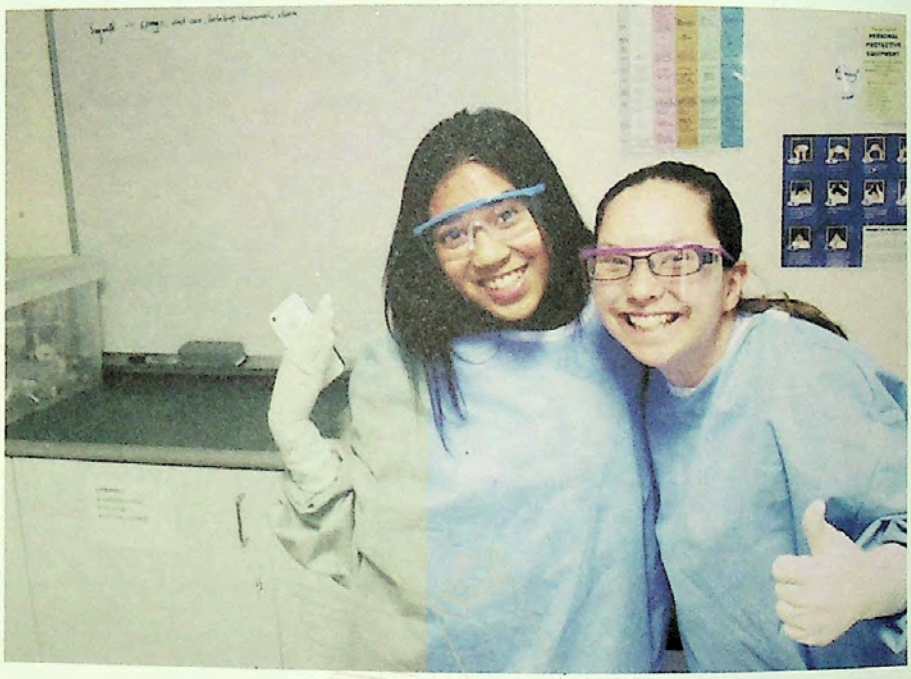

Nursing

Nursing to me is living up to our God-given abilities and to strive to follow Jesus' foot steps in loving everyone and everything.

It impacts others' lives through the care that we have and the compassion to help others. The community sees nurses as the most caring people on this planet.

-Amanda Thompson

Development is contagious. This is the most beautiful lesson learnt during my visit to Mok Mai, a district in northern-central Laos. I also learnt about the wet season — if you're going to try to drive up a mountain, you're going to get stuck. That's exactly what happened when we traveled to the remote villages of the Mok Mai district in the Xiengkhuang province of Laos.

The project here is an example of integrated development, addressing both primary health care and income generation. We traveled to one of the extremely remote villages impacted by this initiative, Ban Tham Ioyome to 49 families and 41 houses.

At the village, toilets have been built, water systems installed, and now the local villagers are working to build a new school. The community is making these changes, and with ADRA's help, the people of Ban Tham Ioy are directly improving the wellbeing of their community.

Income generation has also begun thanks to the 'cow bank'. It involves lending a cow to a family, with the family then being responsible for that cow. When their cow gives birth, the new calf will be given to another family. The village has gone from five to seven cows so far.

We later met with the head of the village in one of their two classrooms. He smiled as he said, "Before ADRA, we didn't have toilets, hospital, water system. Now because of the project, we have."

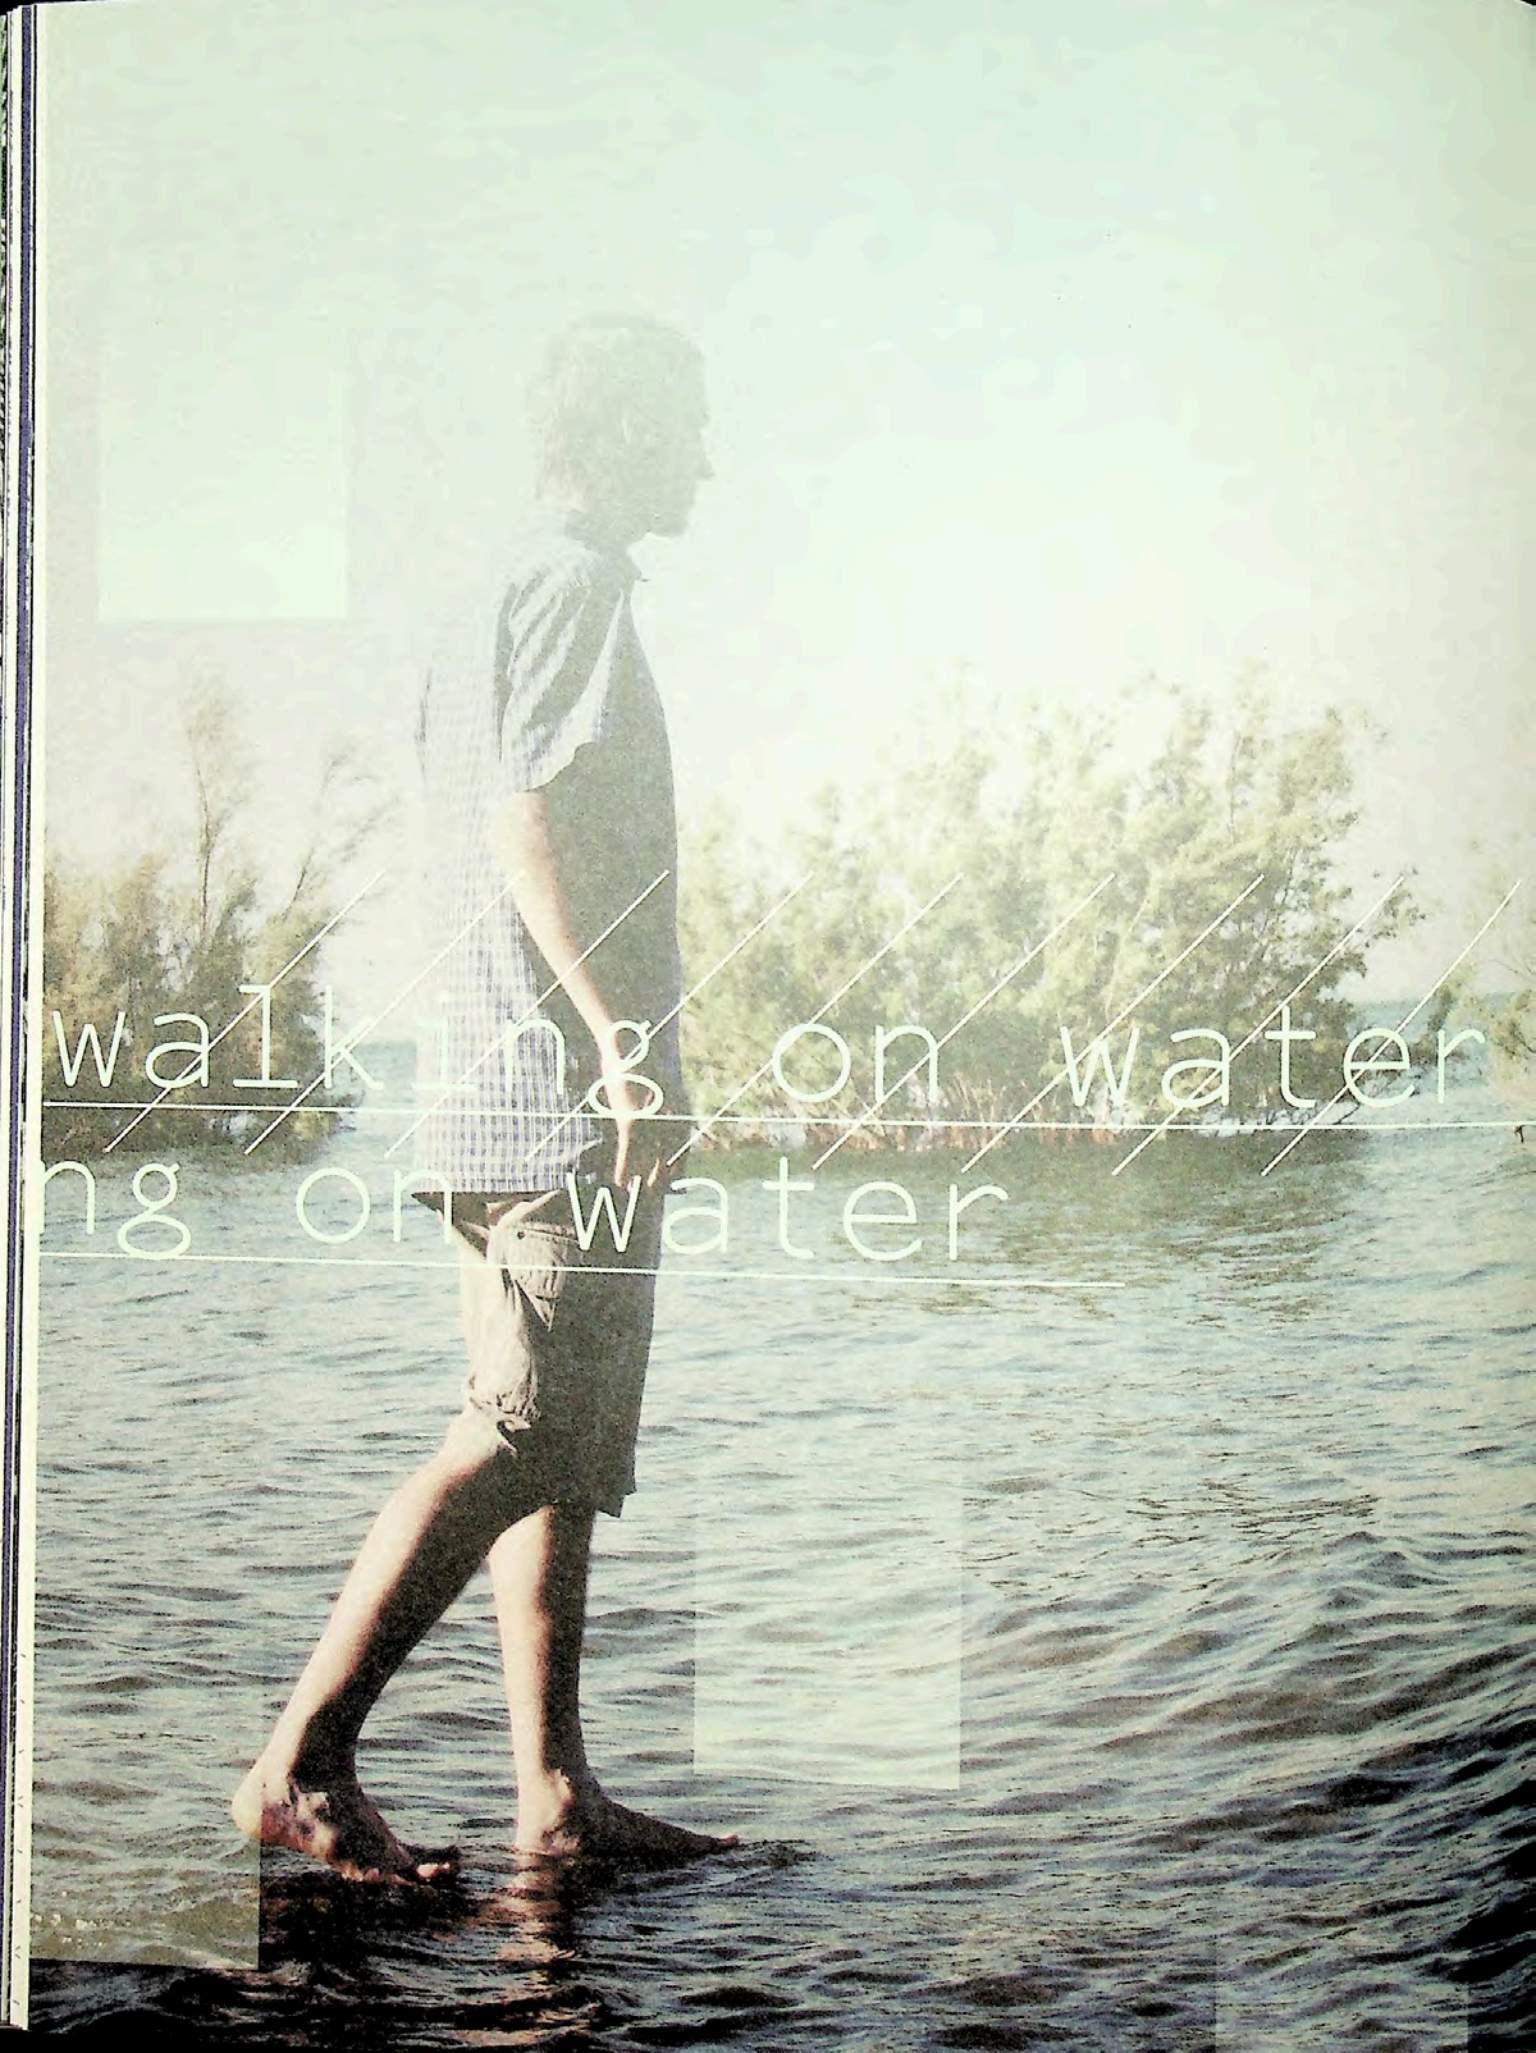

After lunch-soup with a turkey's foot — the primary purpose of this field visit began: the 2012-13 Yearly Report Meeting, bringing together ADRA staff, government officials and village leaders. They discussed the activities of the last year, from health training to income generation by cows, chickens, mushrooms and frogs. They discussed the eleven different villages and what they can improve, and most importantly, how to improve according to the need, skill and interest of each village on a personal level. They emphasised the importance of teaching the people how to use the water and toilets, rather than simply having them installed — sanitation and hygiene training is vital to sustainable community development.

The four-hour meeting was held in a language completely foreign to me, but the 47 people in that room were an inspiration. The people in that room were from different places and backgrounds, but they came focused on a shared purpose.

ADRA Laos is truly helping people to help themselves. These people are in turn creating their own chain reaction of empowerment — they showed me just how contagious development really is.

Ministry & Theology Bible Lands Tour

Ever wanted to have a life-changing trip? Then the Bible Lands Tour might be just what you're after. From visiting the most beautiful churches in the world, to being held up at Jordanian customs suspected of espionage, there's always plenty to leave an indelible impression and make your experience unforgettable.

Definitely one of the most special events for the group was the baptism held in the Jordan River. Four of our group committed or re-committed their lives to Jesus, in the same waters in which he himself was baptised.

One of the most significant moments personally, however, was having the opportunity to visit Gallipoli and look for the remains of my fallen great-uncle. The experience was a difficult one to describe. Some emotions don't have words to encapsulate them, and those who've felt that way often don't coin words, to preserve the sanctity of what they've felt. Perhaps the two words that describe it are 'moving' and 'overwhelming'.

Everything seems different since I've returned. Travelling seems to 'change your place' in the world - it grows you, stretches you, makes you into things you never thought you'd be. Many of my friends speculate that my life experiences have made me into a more personable person.

So whether you go there looking for a spiritual experience, to get in touch with your roots, or even just to get two summers a year; the Bible Lands will surpass your expectations.

- Mitchell Strahan

>> Doug's Piece in the Puzzle.

His Dad handed him paints, brushes, a canvas and a picture of himself and said, "Here you go!" So it was that the Year Seven student painted his first portrait — and boy, has his painting come a long way since.

Doug from Dubbo is always trying to embarrass himself to make people laugh — making people happy and seeing people learn are his favourite things. He's a kids' favourite teacher in the making.

People. They are Doug's greatest passion in life, for people are really what this earth exists for, and this spirit moves throughout his portraiture."Through my art I want to make people tap into themselves, because as soon as they do so, they start to wonder about who they really are."

"I just like touching people with art, and helping them to get in touch with emotions that they otherwise couldn't reach and experience."

(However, Doug admits he will often try and avoid painting at all costs.)

This is Doug the Artist. Now meet Doug the Bronx President, so passionate about everything gym-related that he studied it — solid six-hour days, for two years.

With art being all about aesthetics, Doug finds his two titles go side by side. In the gym he finds he can be artistic with his body, and views exercise as an art form. It is these two passions that paint the canvas of his lifelong fascination with the human mind and body.

"I've used my passion to help give the Bronx an identity — a brotherhood. I will keep supporting the Bronx boys no matter what. They know they can come to me for advice on everything I've learnt, and this helps them, which is all that's important really.'

Wherever he is and in whatever area he finds himself in, this is a man with brush in hand, ready to paint an impact onto anything and everything he does.

"I'd like to be up there with Picasso, because why not? Why would you set your goals low when all you need to do to get higher is to imagine higher? So I'll go up to Picasso. That'd be nice. I've already figured out a way to do it but I'm not going to tell you, just in case it gets out..."

"In this Life, You win or you wanna win, but in the end only the winners win"

Science & Maths

The science faculty is a hidden gem, well worth the long trudge across campus to get there. If you have not already visited and are currently unaware of the exploits that go down in this tucked away pocket, you are forgiven; but you are still missing out on one of the greatest experiences Avondale College has to offer.

Various disciplines join together to form the compound that is the science faculty and all of them live together harmoniously in the far reaches of campus. We have Physics with its rooms that smell like physics (if you are unfamiliar with the smell of physics, smell a dusty bookcase — it's sort of the same thing). The there is maths, with its disciples who all argue it's position as the greatest of sciences. Chemistry and biology have laboratories full of hazardous substances first year students should not be trusted with. All these subjects meet together in the common study room, where visitors are guaranteed the company of dedicated students at any time of the day, even if you decide to take an impromptu 3AM visit.

Most lectures are conducted in intimate class sizes that scarcely reach double digit roll counts. Thus it is only natural that the repore between lecturers and students of the science faculty is unrivaled. It is practically impossible to complete a science degree without at least once visiting a lecturer's house for a home cooked meal. Many lecturers have personal catch phrases, such as Lynden Rodgers — "The cemetery down the road is full of students who did not..." — or Anton Selvaratnam's persistent threats of shooting students who take a step out of line.

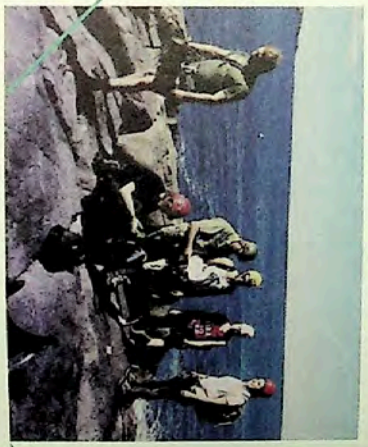

You may have written scientists off as peculiar individuals, but take a visit to the science faculty some time and experience a re-education. Scientists can be odd at times, but that just means the time you spend with them is guaranteed to be amusing. Remember, you adopt the traits of the company you keep — so why not hang out with the smart crowd?

Graduation 2012

What's your legacy?

When your close friend of nine years says the words "I'm moving to a different country", your brain tends to go a little numb. Then wild. Then (eventually) contemplative.

And at this point, you start thinking about legacy. What will people say about you when you are gone? What impression have you left? Whose lives have you changed? Why are you even here?

Graduating students, I can't begin to imagine what is going through your head right now. Equipped with tools, knowledge and authority, you are about to embark on the adventure of 'real life' outside the bubble of Avondale College.

Each school you teach at, each company you do business with, each church community you minister to, or each patient you care for will be left with a snapshot of who you are after you're gone.

Charles Pointon, the old gentlemen whose portrait graces the entry of our beloved Cafeteria, lived simply, generously, and with a passion for others.

He was well known throughout his life as the COSMOS icon, and became a published author at the ripe age of 97, having studied for many years at Avondale.

At the launch, he stated: "I have always wanted to serve the Lord and other people in need around the world... I still want to raise funds for COSMOS". What an inspiration!

When he died, aged 98, in a tragic accident on Freemans Drive, many people mourned the loss of Avondale's lionhearted patriarch as a ray of sunshine dimmed. But he left a legacy of passion and youthful vigour.

Think about it: how do you treat others? How do they view you? A quote I heard in class the other day:

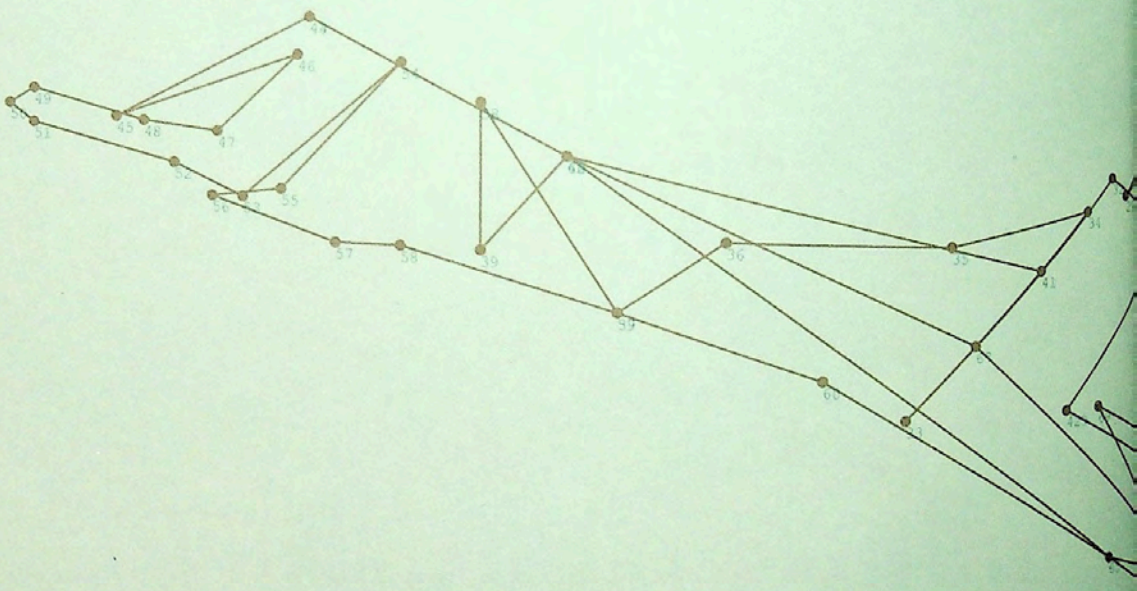

"When we honestly ask ourselves which persons in our lives mean the most to us, we often find that it is those who instead of giving much advice, solutions, or cures, have chosen rather to share our pain and touch our wounds with a gentle and tender hand."

AVONDALE NURSING STUDENT ASSOCIATION

My name is Jodie Barnes.

I am a fourth year Bachelor of Science/Bachelor of Teaching student. I love shoes, chocolate and watching sunrises at the beach. I get motion sick very easily, and am very skilled in emptying my wardrobe on Sabbath mornings in search of an outfit.

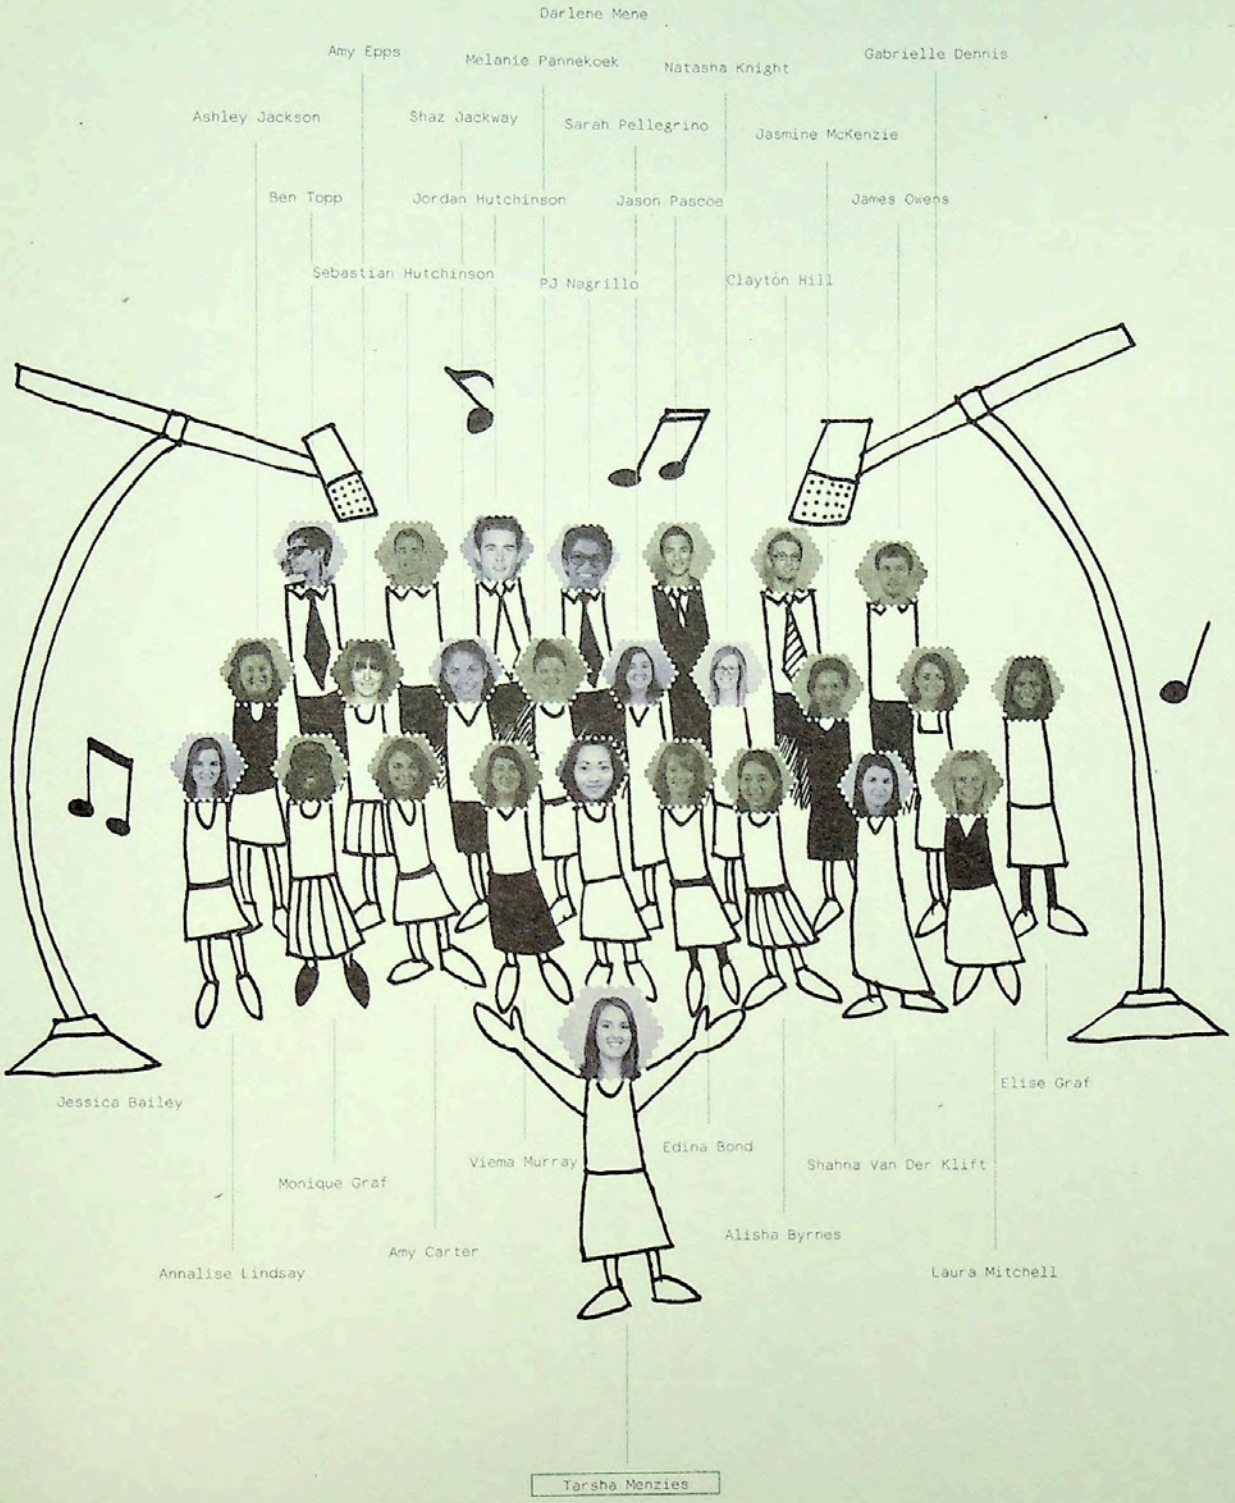

This year I have been blessed with the opportunity to serve Avondale College, change visions into actions and be the voice of the student body (aka Avondale Student Association President). Over the months, this has involved attending many a meeting; each focused on how we, student and staff body alike, can help improve our campus. Some of the things WE have achieved this year as a result of these meetings include the widening of Ella car park, changing the application process for future Avondale Student Association Presidents, opening a drying room in Ella, running an environmental awareness campaign, and heaps more.

Although there will always be room for improvements to be made, I can say with confidence, that I am very proud to be a student of Avondale College of Higher Education, and will look back in years to come with great fondness of my experience here. To all those who are yet to graduate, I encourage you to get involved and be the change you want to see here on campus.

Peace and love,

Jodie

COSMOS is a group of passionate students who have a vision to help those in need, whether they are in a local, national or international area. COSMOS loves to create awareness so students have the opportunity to get out of the College bubble and have their eyes opened to the challenges and issues in the world surrounding them. Some of these issues are as close as Morisset. The students in COSMOS aim to make their mark on the world by helping the people and communities they come in to contact with. This isn't confined to a group or a weekly meeting, but is present in the everyday lives of those passionate about what COSMOS stands for, and more importantly, who they stand for.

BOYS RESIDENTIAL ASSISTANTS

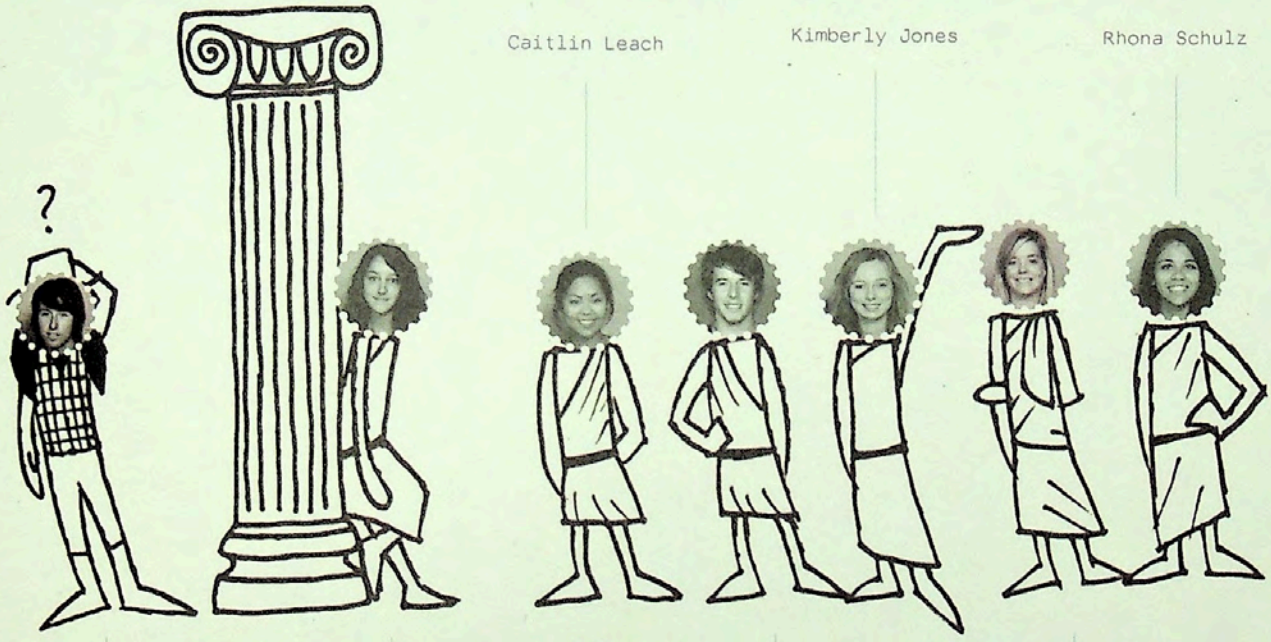

As it comes to the close of my year being an RA I look back and think what a blessing! Yes, there were hard and busy times, but there were so many priceless moments that I will always cherish. Getting to know the ladies on a personal level and hearing their journeys was the biggest influence on my life, as well as hearing them scheme and sneak around chaffing each other. Having a set of master keys isn't too bad either! The late night chats, early morning wake-ups, tea parties in Narnia, last-minute shopping trips, worships, hensessions and drying room dramas are all part of the indoor experience, and being an RA maximised that for me. It has been a huge honour to be a voice for the ladies and speak up on their behalf. The benefit that takes the cake is the responsibility and opportunity I have to had lend a helping hand, pray with ladies who have just given their heart to Christ, and be a shoulder, ear, or hug for those I have the honour of living with.

Ahh. The Voice: the proverbial megaphone of the student population. As the most popular student magazine on campus*, The Voice has emerged as a commentary on life both inside and outside the metaphorical "bubble" that is Avondale College. Reviews of onesies, opinions on boat people, photos of Uni Games and mission trips, news of the Rudd v. Abbott election, articles to stir spiritual awakening, North Korea updates, winners of Pauly's Pizza vouchers, vox pops, challenging editorials, brilliant bios and even a celebrity endorsement grace its pages. Writing for The Voice is leaving a legacy and each issue is a representation of college life in 2013, the ins and outs of our little Bubble in the Bong and a historical snapshot of who we are today.

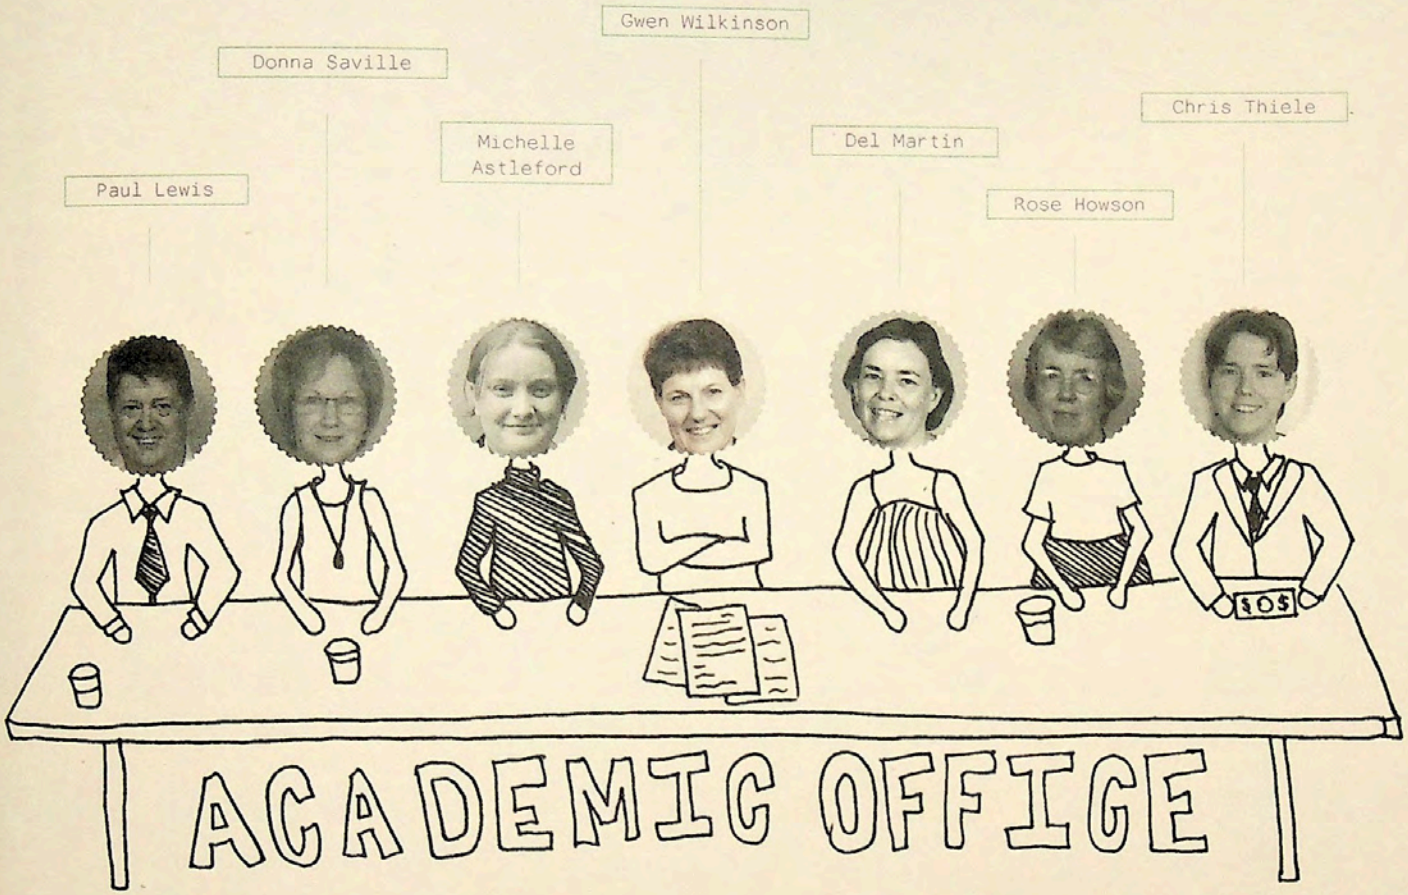

*Well, it's the only student magazine on campus.
Socceroos Captain Lucas Neil gave it the thumbs up (actually!).

You would think Avondale is small, compared to other universities out there.

And while this may be true, I beg to differ: Avondale is bigger than you think.

When I started working in the bookshop, I started meeting new people on campus. I'd try to start a conversation with them while serving them, saying something like:

"So, you a first-year here?"

"No, I'm third-year."

The conversation went downhill after that.

I have met people who have been here for a while that I had never seen before, and I have been here for a long time.

And I'm still meeting new people.

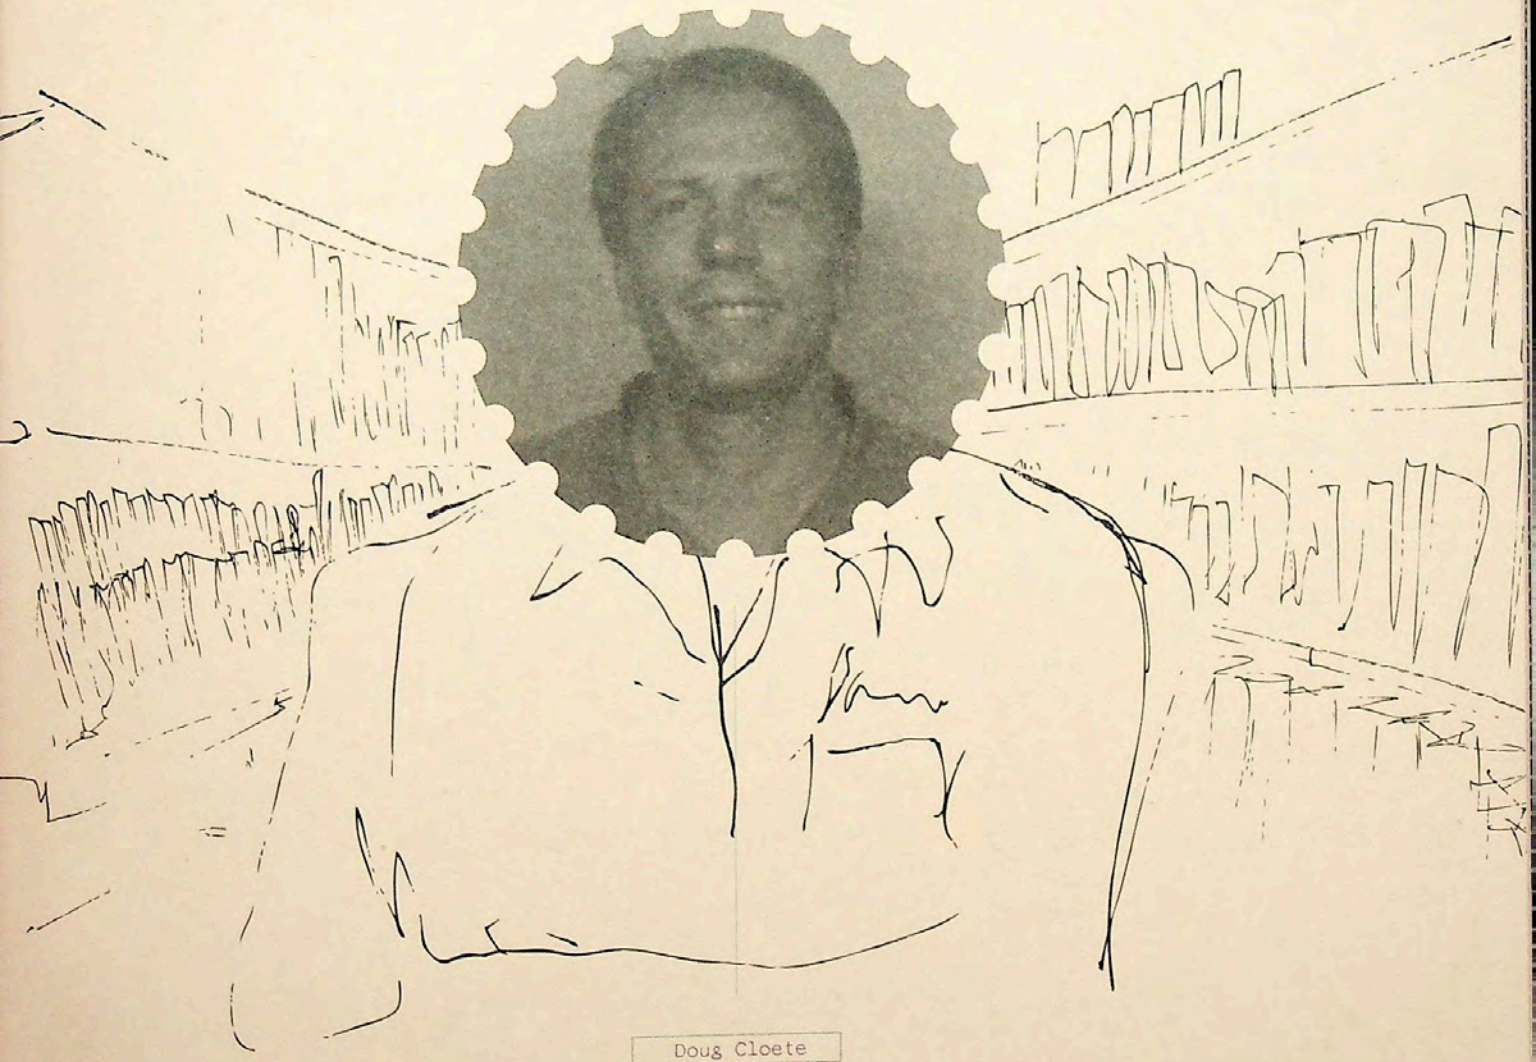

Like people who come to the shop without a booklist, or have no knowledge of the textbooks they need and expect you to be able to read their minds. Or people who do not respond to you or acknowledge you. Or when they do, they speak so softly that you're sure you heard "unicorn" amongst the words you managed to pick up. Or people who demand a full refund for a textbook they bought two years ago (yes, this actually happened, and no, we couldn't give them a full refund because the book was out of its original packaging and was no longer in print).

But there are also people who walk in with a smile and say hello.

People who say thank you. People who remain respectful and polite when we're out of stock. People who ask instead of demand. People whose infectious laughter brightens up the shop (and my day). People who understand that we sometimes make mistakes (not a lot, but it does happen!) especially during "peak hour" when we have to serve a lot of people. (That's generally between 12pm-1pm, hint, hint.)

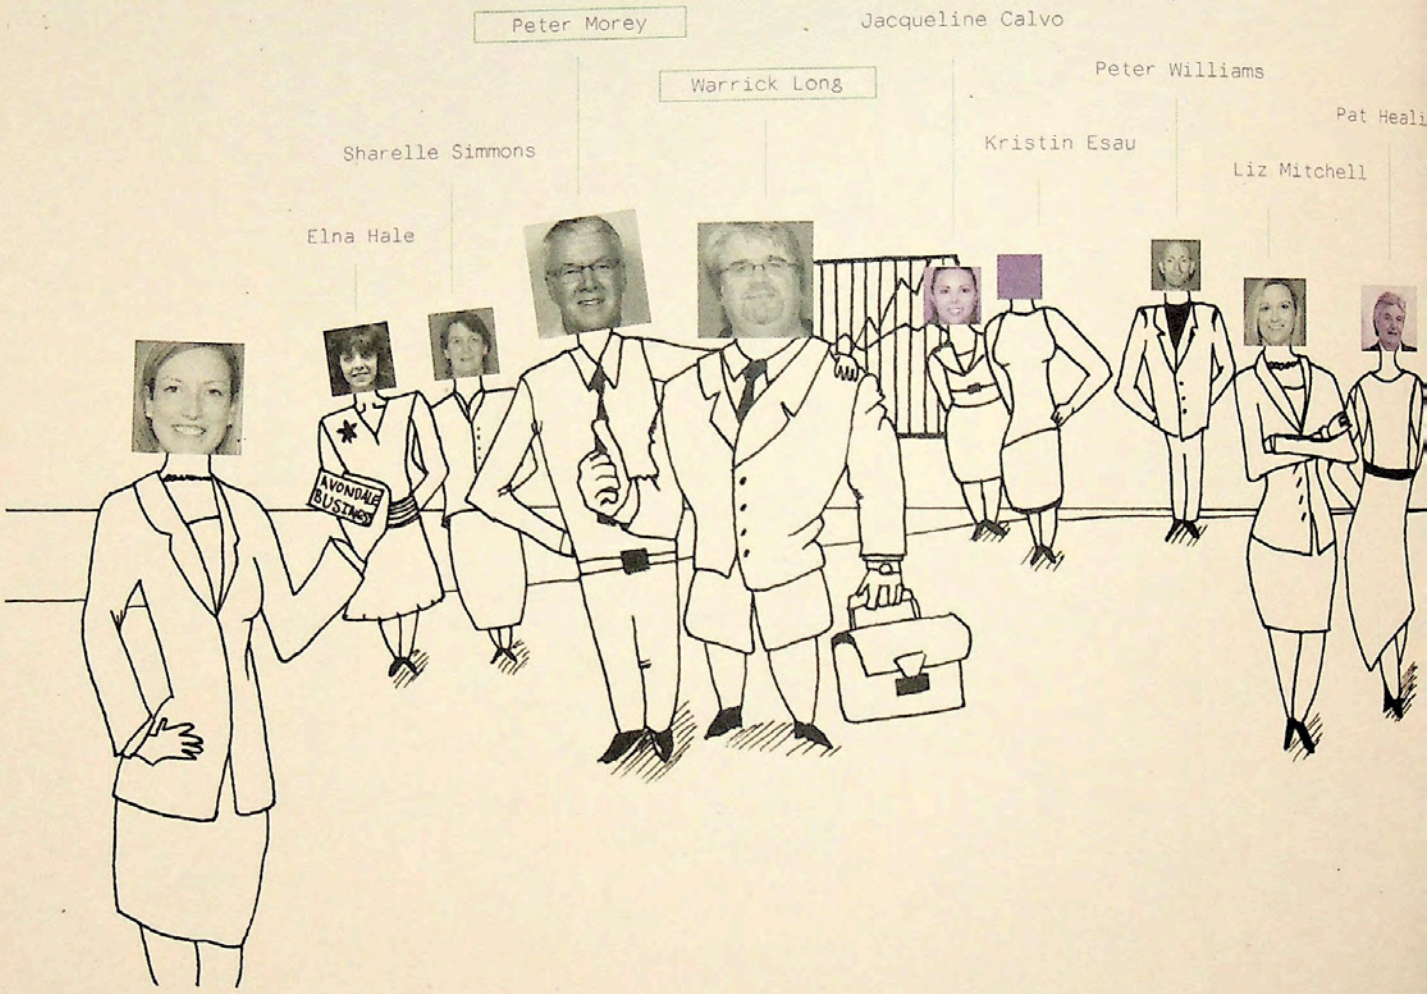

So yes, while Avondale may be small, there is no shortage of interesting people. Get out there. Say hi to someone you've never said hi to before. You just never know who you will meet.
