A JOURNEY THROUGH GIVING WITH AVONDALE

 Avondale
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

A digital disruption

In a year of changing pressures, we thank you for joining the pilgrimage home

Homecoming 2020 marks the 40th time Avondale has celebrated a weekend with its alumni. You've been making the trek back here since 1981.

The pilgrimage is a digital one this year, so we'll all miss seeing classmates embrace or shake hands. These moments, filled with instant joy, shared stories, laughter, heartfelt appreciation and at times even sad reflections, make Homecoming what it is. They remind us of our Avondale experience—we hold our memories precious close. By and large, time spent here served us well as we embarked on a new journey out there, beyond the confines of campus.

It's encouraging to hear from so many about how time at Avondale transformed their life and that what was nurtured here not only propels them forward but also reduces the drag of what life throws at them. And 2020 has thrown a fair bit at our current students.

I enjoy nature and its intricacies, so I found the following interesting and insightful. After an extensive dive for food, emperor penguins spend a moment at the water's surface before taking the next dive. Common sense might suggest the purpose of this pit stop is for a short rest. But scientists believe the time is much more productive. The penguins evidently use it to collect air in the fine downy mesh at the base of their feathers. This trapped air is compressed as the penguins dive and then released as they ascend. The fine bubbles form a lubricating coat, reducing friction and enabling the penguins to launch out of the water at twice their normal swimming speed.

In reminiscing with you, I find some interesting similarities. It's encouraging to hear from so many about how time at Avondale transformed their life and that what was nurtured here not only propels them forward but also reduces the drag of what life throws at them. And 2020 has thrown a fair bit at our current students.

During 2019, comical memes populating our social media feeds projected 2020 to be a year of "great vision and clarity." While that clarity may still come, the irony is we could never foresee what has transpired. From digital classrooms to loss of on-campus activities, social distancing and financial instability, it's been a year of changing pressures.

As we implement sustainable plans for students moving forward, we also reach out to partner with you to ensure the Avondale experience continues to enrich lives.

We've established the Avondale Economic Hardship Grants to help our domestic and international students who have lost income due to the coronavirus and have demonstrated significant financial need. Your generosity supports those who would otherwise find it difficult to afford things such as tuition, textbooks and on-campus accommodation. You'll find giving options at www.avondale.edu.au/giving.

Thank you for your willingness to join our first online-only Homecoming. As you connect electronically from a distance (and remember to unmute in your Zoom honour year reunions), know we look forward to having you back on campus in the near future.

I encourage you to continue connecting with Christ. When pressure mounts, what's released is what He has placed in your mind and in your heart, and He will propel you on to your next step.

Blessings, and enjoy Homecoming 2020.

YOUNG ALUMNUS OF THE YEAR JOSHUA PAGE

Avondale laid a strong foundation for Joshua Page's move into medicine. An Avondale President's Scholarship recipient, he feels privileged to have had opportunities to: play with Avondale Jazz Ensemble and sing with The Promise; make stronger spiritual connections, and; meet wife Ashley, a ministry, theology and soon-to-be counselling alum.

Joshua graduated with a Bachelor of Science in 2014. He is now a Junior Medical Officer for the Illawarra Shoalhaven Local Health District after completing a Doctor of Medicine through the University of Wollongong this past year. He works mostly out of the Shoalhaven District Memorial Hospital in Nowra with some rotations at Wollongong Hospital. The good news for someone who seeks to practice in rural areas: Joshua has an existing offer of employment for residency in 2021.

Values such as equity, justice and compassion guide Joshua. He minored in international poverty and development studies at Avondale and, during a gap year that coincided with a severe earthquake, interned with the Adventist Development and Relief Agency in Nepal. Witnessing the transformation in Kathmandu as the country recovered proved cathartic. "Candles lined the streets, continuing in unbroken lines even over the rubble. Tikka portraits and the names of family members lost in the quake sprung up in common areas and intersections. The people had pulled together to grieve and, in doing so, had demonstrated their strength."

Avondale Alumni honours Dr Joshua Page for providing compassionate service and for seeking to address issues of inequity in healthcare.—Brenton Stacey

ALUMNA OF THE YEAR ANGELA SAUNDERS

Failing a university entrance exam motivated Angela Saunders to work hard. Returning from New Zealand with her family, she enrolled in the secretarial course at Avondale. Making friends "who have enriched my life" and playing piano for the Avondale Symphonic Choir helped restore confidence.

A career change came within a decade as Angela graduated with a Bachelor of Science in nutrition and dietetics from Loma Linda University. Experience as a clinical dietitian at Sydney Adventist Hospital paved the way for managing, over 12 years, the Nutrition and Dietetics Department. Completing a master's in leadership and management at Avondale helped Angela become better at her job. Now Senior Dietitian—Science and Advocacy at Sanitarium Health Food Company, where she has worked since 2006, Angela has published several book chapters and journal articles on vegetarian nutrition, her specialty area.

Angela has juggled the demands of family, full-time work and further study while supporting husband Bob. His role as a Seventh-day Adventist minister took the couple to Massachusetts in the early 2000s. Angela worked in sales at an Adventist Book Centre and served as organist and choir director for a Uniting Church during this United States spell.

The birth of twin sons has enriched Angela and Bob's life. "Being mother and now grandmother to Ron and Rod's children is the greatest blessing I've received."

Avondale Alumni honours Angela Saunders for her commitment and contribution to understanding the role of food as medicine.—Brenton Stacey

ALUMNUS OF THE YEAR GRAHAM STACEY

Graham Stacey's contribution to people care, first in Australia then the United States, addresses the interface of religion, psychology and ethics in contemporary culture.

The beginning was youth ministry but denominational turmoil prompted the pursuit of a psychology degree and master's degrees in family therapy, experimental psychology and clinical ethics, finishing with a PhD in clinical psychology. He applied this knowledge as Director of Warburton Health Care Centre and of the Psychological Services Training Clinic at Loma Linda University. A move into academia—at La Sierra University, Loma Linda and Avondale—followed. He retired as an Associate Dean for Admissions and Student Affairs at Loma Linda.

Avondale spurred critical thinking, evidence-based discovery and their implications for systemic change. These remain a passion, as does prioritising connection over ideology. Publications analysing student performance have now given way to family history research. The latter "provides a rich understanding of our roots and formations."

Graham has embraced the integration of his academic disciplines with a journey of faith. "Human beings are not one-dimensional—we're wonderfully complex. Every source of information helps us better understand ourselves and each other." His advice: "Keep connected. Life is short. We need each other for every stage."

Avondale Alumni honours Dr Graham Stacey for bringing a greater understanding of human nature to the continuing revelation of divine character.—Brenton Stacey

MARY TRIM

Four-year-old Mary Buckingham stood on a box in a radio studio to recite verses she had composed, and so began a career as a crafter of the English language. An author of five books, a columnist for the Hawkes Bay Herald Tribune, and a poetry contributor to Spectrum, Mary has been published hundreds of times.

Raised a Methodist, Mary, then 16, attended a Seventh-day Adventist mission presented by Pr Len Vince and joined the church through baptism. She declined a scholarship for a university education in New Zealand to attend Avondale, graduating from the Theological Normal course in 1950. As an athlete with records in hurdling, she also passed over an opportunity to compete at the Commonwealth Games. Marrying classmate John Trim in 1952, Mary supported her husband's innovative public relations and wholistic health and wellbeing ministry in Australia, New Zealand and India—he ended his career as Chief Administrative Officer of Sydney Adventist Hospital.

Early career teaching appointments, including in Mumbai, and further undergraduate education preceded a long tenure as a lecturer in English at what is now Australian Catholic University. Mary would complete two master's degrees and a postgraduate certificate in Teaching English as a Second Language. She continued to teach when John retired to the United Kingdom, in humanities at Newbold College and in childhood and children's literature at Loughborough University, from which she graduated with a PhD. She would also lecture in Thailand.

The Class of 1950 honours Dr Mary Trim for parlaying a love of literature into a ministry of teaching and learning.—Brenton Stacey

BRUCE JOHNSTON

A career in ministry and teaching prepared Bruce Johnston for what he considers one of his most significant contributions: coordinating and mentoring a team presenting Complete Health Improvement Programs over the past 10 years. These have helped more than 500 people to a better physical and spiritual life.

Bruce graduated “against the odds” with a Bachelor of Arts (Theology). A “recluse” who “spent a lot of time with books,” he remembers the encouragement provided by “Godly” teachers. Student Ministerial Association meetings provided “a passing parade of pastors and missionaries who inspired me with a greater vision.”

He set about fulfilling this over the next decade as a Seventh-day Adventist minister on the North and South Islands of New Zealand. A call to the church's Madang Mission in Papua New Guinea followed before a return to ministry in Tasmania, where Bruce helped establish North West Christian School. He completed further study, which led to a move from the church to the classroom, as a science teacher at St Mary's College. A Master of Educational Studies confirmed this new calling.

The unexpected death of Bruce and wife Lei's youngest daughter, Tania, in 1972 precipitated a crisis of faith. “I doubled down on perfectionism, but in vain.” An Avondale summer school with theologian Hans LaRondelle brought focus “not on me and my salvation but on God and His grace.”

The Class of 1960 honours Bruce Johnston for sharing a message of health and happiness with those in his church and community.—Brenton Stacey

RUSSELL WOOLLEY

A former student from the Solomon Islands once told Russell Woolley that without the principal's encouragement, he would never have studied at university. The Betikama graduate became the country's chief pharmacist. Attending a class reunion at the school, Russell discovered one student had become prime minister and four had become members of parliament. Maintaining contact with students and receiving invitations to their milestone celebrations is one of Russell's most significant professional achievements.

He would serve for 10 years at the Seventh-day Adventist high school in Auckland and, after six years at Betikama, for 20 in Christchurch, long enough to teach the children of former students. A desire to share the life he found in Christ, one "based on the security of knowing God is in control and wants the best for you," motivated Russell.

Teaching seemed to be Russell's calling but because of family circumstances he tried other things, losing all the jobs he landed. A gift, the Jacaranda yearbook, delivered in a paper parcel that Russell did not open for seven years eventually brought him to Avondale.

A gardener, Russell lives with wife Laurel on what used to be an empty cow paddock but is now four-and-a-half acres of lawns, shrubs, flower and vegetable gardens, and fruit trees. He managed the building of their home in the middle of this greenery. Cooking, even for large-scale catering, is also a passion.

The Class of 1970 honours Russell Woolley for a lifelong commitment to the ministry of teaching that inspired his students to live their best lives.—Brenton Stacey

RODNEY BRADY

Frustration with his work at a bank, an impersonal part-time accounting course plus the persistence of his local church pastor led Rodney Brady to Avondale. Despite having a limited view of and little intention to work for the Seventh-day Adventist Church, Rod accepted an offer of denominational employment after graduation "and 40 years later I'm still working for the church with experiences and friendships I would never have had if I'd completed my studies in Melbourne."

A keen observer of structural changes to the Australian economy in the 1970s and 80s, Rod formed his ideas based on the thinking around economic rationalism and the efficiency of financial markets. "This ideology has influenced me in making decisions that seek the best outcomes for the use of church resources."

Rod's career began in his home state of Victoria and includes service as an accountant in Tasmania, North New Zealand, northern New South Wales and at the then Adventist Media Centre. A longer tenure as Financial Controller at Signs Publishing Company followed before a move to the Central Pacific Union Mission as Treasurer. He assumed the same role in Victoria on return from Fiji. Initially called as Associate Treasurer, Rod is now—at more than 20 years—the longest-serving Treasurer/Chief Financial Officer of the South Pacific Division.

His most significant personal achievement is as husband of Kathryn and father of twins Sharyn and Michael.

The Class of 1980 honours Rodney Brady for a 40-year stewardship of Adventist finances that has enabled the church to respond to change.—Brenton Stacey

ERROL SINGER

Errol Singer lived in 20 houses over the course of his local Seventh-day Adventist church ministry. "We survived," he says, reflecting on the support of wife Michelle and children Sherrilyn, Karina, Charissa and Damien. Errol felt called, so he went. And he served with compassion and empathy, accepting all of those whom God placed in his path.

After graduating with a Bachelor of Arts (Theology) at Avondale in 1980, Errol briefly sold Adventist literature in Tasmania before receiving a call from the church in Victoria, where he would minister for almost 12 years. During this time, he returned to Avondale to complete one of the first Master of Arts (Theology) courses.

Errol would continue his ministry back home in New Zealand, pastoring 14 churches on the North Island over more than 20 years. Sharing life with Polynesian Adventists for 12 of these years is one of his most memorable experiences. Experiencing their culture, their dreams and their love—"buried in gifts"—enriched Errol's perception of God's work in this world. As did two overseas professional development tours in 1995 and 2009 and his love of reading a range of ministry-related literature, both of which brought fresh insight.

"God's calling is His enabling," says Errol. "He can use what you give Him regardless of what you start with and where you find yourself at any point in life." Errol continues to serve, now as a volunteer, to relieve hardship and teach the Bible in his local community.

The Class of 1980 honours Pr Errol Singer for his unwavering dedication to serving others with integrity and heart.—Rachel Humphries

1990*LLOYD GROLIMUND

Lloyd Grolimund is a fourth generation Seventh-day Adventist thanks to the influence of colporteur Charles Watson, who later become president of the worldwide church. Watson visited Lloyd's great-grandfather and grandmother on their farm in remote Victoria not long after they began keeping the Sabbath. Following his grandfather and father into ministry, Lloyd's goal is to "take the gospel to as many people as will listen to me."

Avondale helped shaped Lloyd's life, in particular his conversion to Jesus Christ. "I first experienced that deep, born-again relationship and felt privileged to learn under Godly teachers." His education gave him the knowledge and the skills to meet "the challenges in my ministry and my life."

A former builder, Lloyd moved into youth ministry on the Gold and Sunshine Coasts and in North New Zealand in the decade after graduation. He then accepted a call to Sydney as minister of the Wahroonga church, where he served for almost 15 years. He is now minister at the New Hope church and Speaker/Director of the Aussie Pastor Media Network.

In keeping with his Aussie Pastor persona, Lloyd spends his spare time on a hobby farm and enjoys cricket, gardening and YouTube. He is also an avid reader.

Lloyd is father of four young adult children, Hannah, Daniel, Danae and Emmanuelle, and husband of Maylizca.

The Class of 1990 honours Pr Lloyd Grolimund for a gospel conviction that demands commitment to the Great Commission.—Brenton Stacey

2000*PETA HAY

Early in Peta Hay's teaching career, a gifted student shared a poem, revealing a fear and the guilt of inauthenticity, of suppressing her true self over trying to fit in with her peers. This inspired Peta to do more to support "not only the academic needs of gifted students but also their social and emotional needs."

After graduating from Avondale, Peta taught at Strathfield Adventist College and, for four years, coordinated learning support for gifted students. She also stepped into the tertiary sector, spending a decade as a tutor at the University of New South Wales (UNSW) and Australian Catholic University.

In 2008, nine months pregnant with her second child, Peta completed her PhD through UNSW. Her thesis examined the moral reasoning and empathy in gifted children. "They're not necessarily high-performing private school students. They're a diverse lot who may underachieve, feel lonely or have a disability."

While supporting gifted students can be seen as "politically unsound," Peta's Christian motivation to serve has been unwavering. She continues to lecture at UNSW. Her focus is on ensuring we hear the needs of students, support parents and create research-based strategies for educators. While the school system can be seen as a one size fits all, Peta is passionate about finding ways to challenge those who learn differently. "I try to make my teaching engaging and rigorous, and I still think relationships are key to effective learning."

The Class of 2000 honours Dr Peta Hay for her advocacy of gifted students and dedication to improving their educational experience.—Rachel Humphries

2010*NEIL BUSTOS

Neil Bustos is as passionate today about his work as on his first day at Kempsey Adventist School the year after graduating from Avondale. Ten years and four schools later, teaching maths is still the best job he's had.

Completing a Bachelor of Arts/Bachelor of Teaching in 2010, Neil wanted to make a difference in children's lives. This continues to motivate him. His adventurous spirit—snowboarding and climbing a volcano (that he then tobogganed down) in Chile—finds its way into the classroom and his lessons. Neil is head of the Maths Department on the Cessnock campus of St Philip's Christian College.

Neil's parents modelled this inclination to try new things. They immigrated from Chile 42 years ago with a five-year plan to work hard and head back home. But they fell in love with Australia and never permanently returned.

Nurtured in a Victorian Seventh-day Adventist community, Neil felt the lure of a smaller tertiary institution where he could be held accountable by lecturers. What he found at Avondale exceeded his expectations—the interest and care from academics such as Associate Professor Peter Kilgour benefited him. Neil now shows the same interest and care to the students he teaches.

Neil is engaged to fiancé Ally and lives in Newcastle. However, he continues to be amazed that he can go "pretty much anywhere in Australia" and reconnect with alumni of Avondale.

The Class of 2010 honours Neil Bustos for a love of teaching that makes a difference in the lives of his students.—Rachel Humphries
