dr robert drewer

it is our great privilege to dedicate Jacaranda 2006 to dr robert drewer.

for any science or nursing student who has been fortunate to have been under his tutelage you can't help but be amazed by his enthusiasm for both his subject and students.

dr drewer was born in october, 1940 and raised in south australia. he began his career at avondale at the ripe age of 27 in 1967 after completing his doctorate in organic photochemistry and spending some time in california in post-doctoral studies.

it's his buoyant personality that has endeared so many students to him. notably, he has shown a pastoral interest in his students. you only have to visit his office to see the keen interest he has in college life. the walls of his office contain images of all his past nursing students from the past 15 years. and when your birthday rolls around, you can be guaranteed to find a personally addressed card in your pigeonhole. to date he has sent out more than a thousand cards!

his love for his students and teaching was never more clearly illustrated when he suffered serious back pain and was confined to bed. never to miss a moment of teaching, dr drewer insisted that he be wheeled around the laboratory on a stretcher in order to instruct his students on their practical activity.

dr drewer has been described by staff and students as being very open and honest, enthusiastic about his subject with an eye for detail. he has a great sense of humour and integrates his faith into his personal life. he is held in the highest regard by his colleagues and always looks for ways to ensure his students pass their course, be it through spending his own hours in private tutorial sessions or personal phone calls. this has been reflected in the high pass rates in nursing students due to his dedication to each individual.

we applaud the tremendous efforts and influence dr drewer has given to the students of avondale college. thank you so much!

editor's message

when i think back on the past three years, and especially this last one, i am amazed at how quickly time has slipped through my fingers. but what has amazed me most is the incredible journey that i have walked, run, laughed, cried, shared, experienced, and embraced. the journey that was more then i could ever have imagined.

i came here not knowing a single person, wondering if i had made the right decision, apprehensive yet excited, anticipating the endless adventures and new experiences that were right in front of me.

i will always remember being introduced to squeaky sand, sharing a room for the first time, sleeping in the church, camping by bonfires down on the beach and makeshift tents up in the watagans. my many attempts to play various sports, music in all its forms, classes that required me to make bronze sculptures and inspiring lectures that pushed me to expand my mind, challenge my thinking, and believe in myself.

i will never forget friends that taught me life wasn't just about hard work. friends that taught me the importance of relationships and to seize opportunities with both hands. friends that understood me and were there for me when i needed them. friends that i cried and laughed with and friends that taught me to love. this is the place where i truly found god and what life was all about.

taking chances and making decisions, right or wrong, is what has shaped me, taken me out of my comfort zone, and forced me to grow. it has been an incredible adventure and i have loved every moment of it. i will step out into the next stage of life excited and with some element of terror, hoping that what lies before me will be just as exciting and eventful as the past three years.

i hope that as you turn the pages of this book you will remember your journey — that it will come alive, and that the people, moments and experiences that have become part of you will always be remembered.

i hope that as you remember you will smile.

interview with john cox

what were your interests at college? i was in the choir, was editor of the jacaranda for two years, editor of the student newspaper, played badminton and worked on the college farm. some of my favourite books were 'desire of ages', tolstoy's 'annakarenina' and shakespeare.

what is your favourite colour and leisure activity? gold. i love walking, i've done a lot of bush walking in the past.

what is the college journey like? endless opportunities for students. for the college, avondale has gone from a small, unpromising beginning to an institute well recognised in australia's higher education sector. possibilities for the future are significant growth and university status.

what do you see as avondale's future? to become a university that is the institute of choice for those looking for a christian education, based on sound values.

how does avondale benefit the wider community? many of avondale's staff are actively involved with the community, for example some do research that benefits the community, some are involved in projects, some aid the indigenous people of australia. they also contribute to the wider church, from speaking appointments in australia and overseas to general expertise in their respective fields. on a broader scale, avondale benefits the entire community by producing quality graduates that contribute to australia and overseas and increase the fund of availability in jobs. therefore, avondale has a huge impact on the community.

what is so special about avondale, what is your favourite part? the fact that avondale is committed to adventist christian values.

what does avondale mean for students of the past, present and future? avondale has produced a continuous stream of graduates, which provides a pool of employees for the church. they are the people who will carry on the church work of the past 100 years, and contribute to the wider community.

how do you feel about seeing students come through college and their maturing process in the professional, spiritual and personal sphere? it is essentially a huge maturing process of different people. students are more informed when they finish, their knowledge is better structured and they become professionals. it gives me a tremendous amount of satisfaction to see it and help facilitate it. the spiritual development that takes place is the most satisfying of all.

what is the jac all about? the energy, variety and community of student activity are recorded in these pages. enjoy

i love everything about avondale! 24-hour bi-lo, my course, my friends, worships, the positive, god-centred atmosphere. i love the road to avondale college. when you drive up the driveway it is so symbolic of your road through life. the more you move forward the better it is. i love college for its social and spiritual atmosphere. it's a safe place to meet awesome people and grow with god and others. it's a christian college. the focused lecturers with an emphasis on god's grace and love. a campus where you can feel that god is present in everything. i am quite fond of the art department, the selection of interesting magazines, and the fact it's like a secret underground world. the cows... it's what brought me here. the smell of the manure on a hot summers' day, the buzz of the flies that congregate on your back to make you feel popular. oh the joys of summer at college. andre hall and all those who reside in it, even the mice and frogs. the caf food... and i'm being serious love the people that make avondale what it is. i have met some amazing people here. i love the lettuce at the caf too!

location! location! location! the breezeway, the unique, bittersweet and abnormal experience. church services, communication with god, youth rallies, studying for a degree, meeting new people, and worshipping god together with people. i think it's the dorm life and the friends i've made while living in watson. what do i love? i can't quite put my finger on it, it's everything it just makes me smile. the smell of weetbix in the morning. the classes, the lecturers, the library, the places to run, the new people i have met, and the time i've spent getting to know god. the showers! my poster filled room and all the great people that get me living. sport, mates, good times, one particular nurse... what i love most about this place are the mates i have made, friendships that will last forever. the social culture and being laid-back. meeting up in the darkroom. all the hot boys and girls. the opportunity to interact with people who love god. the christian atmosphere, social interactions and outstanding academics combine together to create a plethora of amazing and unsurpassed study options. i love the free parking. the people who raise their eyes to smile hello. i love how there's no gangland warfare. i love how avondale kills ordinary and makes extra-ordinaries. i love the nature of avondale especially the cows. i love the weetbix! i inhale them all day. beat that brett lee.

i love having an extended wardrobe! my friends, basketball, late nights and especially the weekends! what more could you want? all the lolly jars in the canteen, the lovely sun and swimming pool, and not getting injured in basketball. creative use of gluten, fabulously foxy friends, and serious sleep deprivation. the canteen! survivor nights! barbecue shapes! hanging out with all my friends, basketball, staying up really late chatting, caf conversations, 7:28, being encouraged to have a closer walk with god. that i can experience all four seasons in the comfort of my own dorm room. winter freeze of the corridor outside, autumn breeze through my window, summer head from the drying room underneath me and springtime freshness whenever my friends walk through the door. the way you feel when you wake up in the morning and smell the sweet scent of weet-bix, then see a cute cow outside ella. avondale is an emotional roller coaster, that's why i love it!

i followed the white rabbit, i landed in a world unknown but not so different from my home, and so just like a timeless fable my college life began. there were faces and places i would get to know and some places and faces that i would wish i didn't.

it was an awakening, there were no talking chess pieces or oversized playing cards, just genuine people experiencing the same thing as i. so we banded together from day one. our identity was forged as first years, together we marched through the caf avoiding eye contact with the 4th years at all cost, double checked our time tables so as not to be late and discussed the prettiest and the hottest.

it didn't take long for friendships to develop, it didn't take long for it to feel right, it didn't take long for it to become my college. this is how it began for me, a journey of only a kilometre or two, for others many thousands of kilometres. our college life had set sail, where the breeze would take us no one knew, but in the boat under the banner of first years we sailed together the things we carry with us...

what do we know, even now? ask the children. look at what they grew up to be. we can only speak of the things we carried with us, and the things we took away.

eighteen years. ancient as it looms on the road ahead and yet outrageously childlike when we sit in our rocking chairs flicking through our inner photo albums. college for me was something i had always sworn (rather publicly) i would never do. god had other ideas. declarations of war against conventionality were sheepishly retracted and i packed my bags for 'the holy city'. to be honest my arrival was less significant to me than the inner battles i fought in deciding to come. by the time i arrived my die had already been cast, my purpose clear. purpose. that is what we should always carry with us. you never know what else you may have to leave on the way.

growth is one of the most painful processes in life. even more excruciating is its necessity. i can honestly say that i have changed more in the last three years than i had in the eighteen years prior. it has been both an incredible blessing and an arduous burden. cherished possessions have been stripped from me and i have watched them diminish on the road behind me. i've been terrified by my weakness and surprised by my strength. what have i learned? primarily that love is about as useful as an unread book if you cannot express it. and finally, that we must keep growing, always growing. that is what i will take away. after all...

after all what do we know even now?

deciding to come to college took something like five years. and when i finally, unequivocally, irrevocably, definitively decided... mat proposed. the excitement of at last getting my feet onto the road god had patiently revealed to me! but it was like the time i was eating carrot and my tooth exploded. a little thing, a grain of sand, in the weak point of the enamel opened up a world of pain. i'd be going to college without mat.

it takes 18 hours to drive from adelaide to cooranbong in a 1995 nissan micra when its wheel shafts are feeling their age. everything starts to shiver and vibrate when you hit 100 kilometres an hour. it's a flat, yellow road reminding you as the horizon lengthens, that you're in the middle of colossal emptiness. i cried most of the way through my first sabbath, surrounded by inspired worshippers. that emptiness was inside me now, and i felt far from the people who loved me, who defined my experiences and memories, who assured me i was in the right place at the right time.

in the waves of sadness, i bobbed around, wearing my life jacket of hope and determined. because i wanted to be here, i wanted to learn to be the best minister of god i could be, i wanted to meet amazing people, i wanted to succeed. i was committed to the journey, but this was not how i had imagined it would be...

knowing the hand of god protects absolutely what you trust to him, is my definition of this year. i've experienced such convincing temptations and felt believable opportunities to let go, to let it all slide. doubt is a powerful motivator. i've felt lonely, incompetent, ridiculous. and then god has reminded me: he has chosen me, he has guided me, he has a purpose for me. god has surrounded me with friends who bring heaven to life in this world. god has enabled my trusty nokia to transcend the empty spaces and god has brought peace to my heart.

it might sound like exactly the sort of thing a theology student would say, as if reading bible stuff all day is somehow making me a holier monkey than anyone else. yeah. well. the bible becomes another assignment unless you step aside each time you get the blues (or the mean reds, or the ghostly greens...) to look for the one behind the book. that's a conscious choice i often have to be reminded to make.

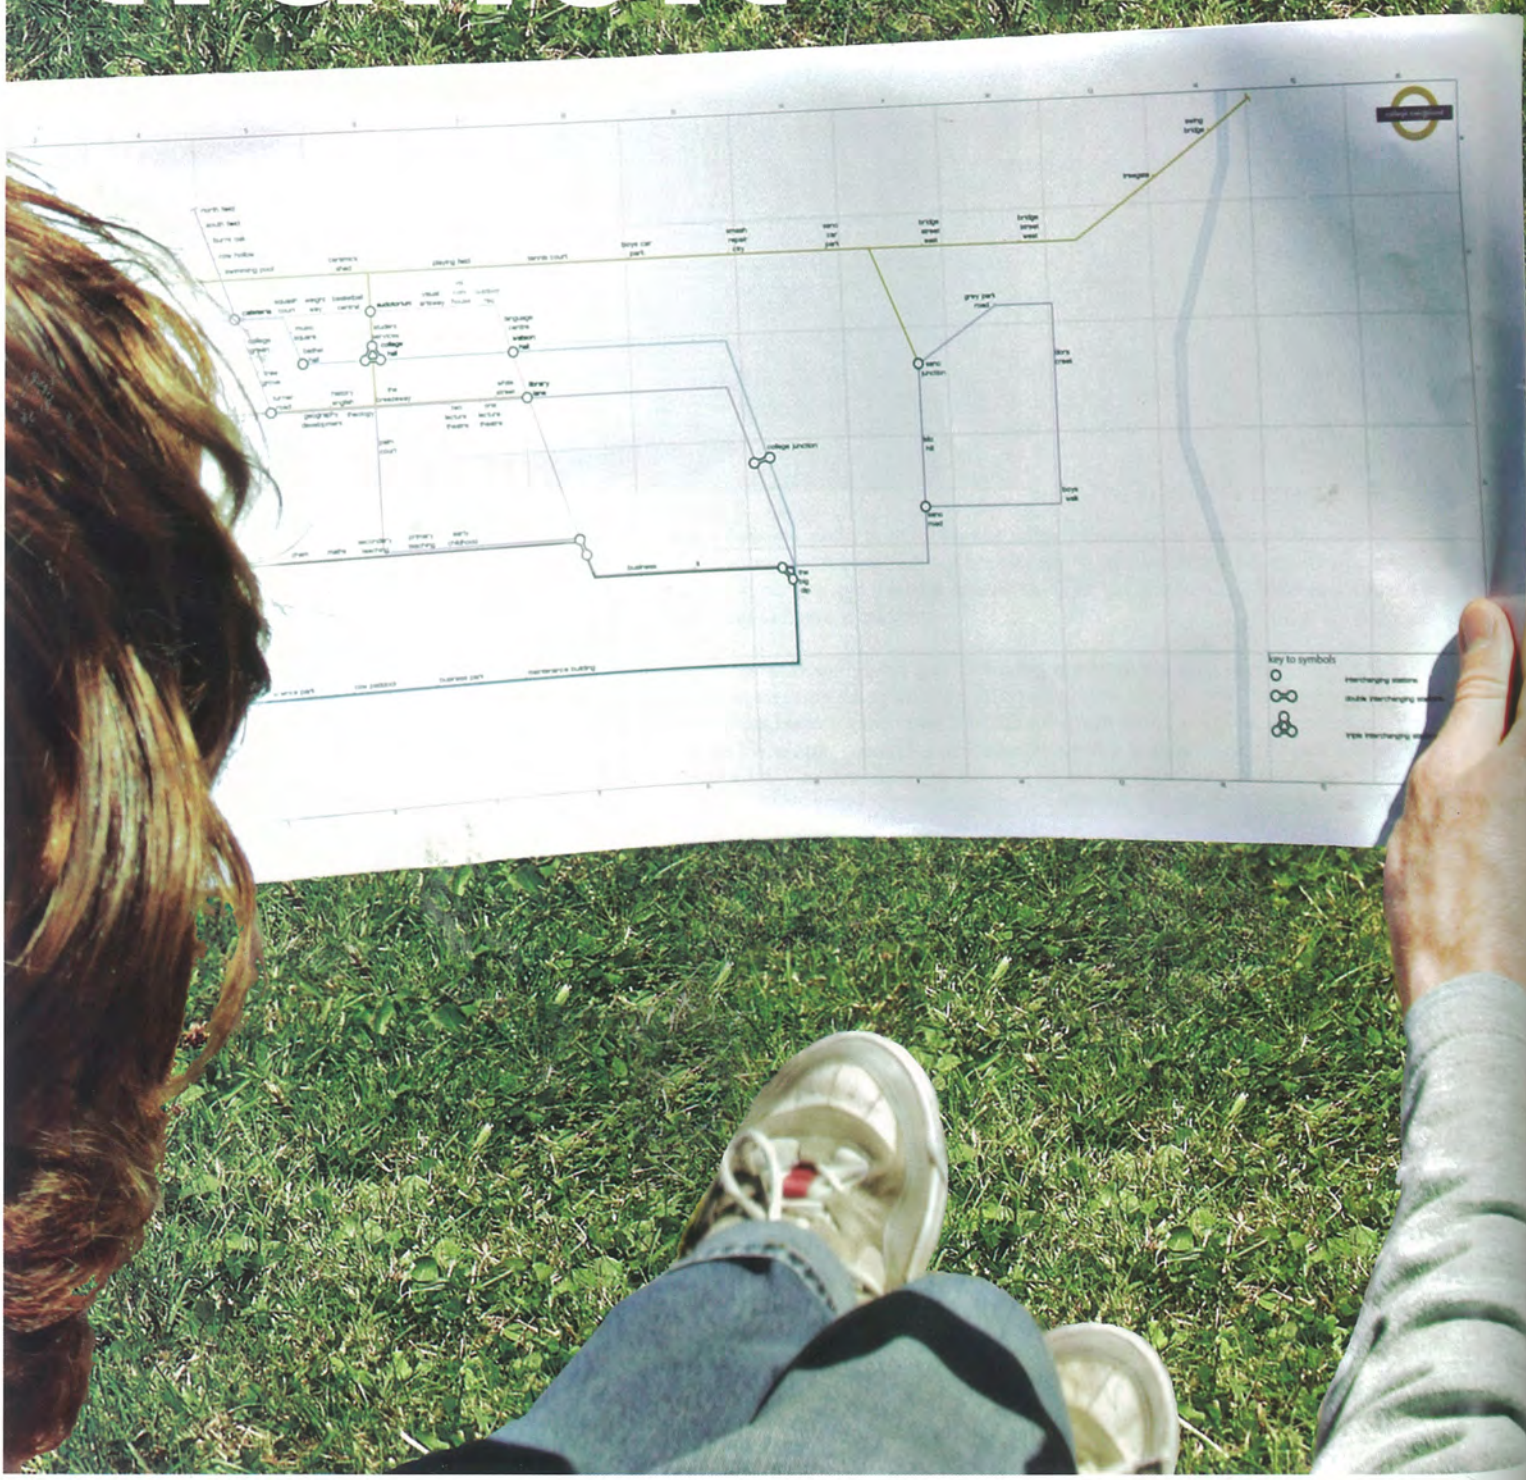

each day i'm getting a little more solid on ministry being a friend to the people around me, whom god loves overpoweringly. i want to listen more to them than to myself. i'd like to sleep longer, but listening is more important. if i'm listening, it doesn't matter how far away i am. and i think i can maybe say i've got a handle on daniel 7. but i'm still not sure about bridesmaid's dresses? lavender? apricot?

the miles of my journey have proved my lord true, and he is so precious to me...

when i started this journey with fresh childlike trust, i believed that my own way was best. i would go to my classes, to simply get passes, and at night in the dorms, try to get some rest.

in the friendships i started since from my family i departed, i found in my new friends a home. in the day we would play, and at night just delay, from the study that would cease to leave us alone.

in the caf i would eat and soon jump to my feet for the sports in the audo at night. i would cheer for my team, and at that girl simply beam, in the hope of becoming her 'knight' yet as the days tarried longer i started to wonder, if there was more to this life than i'd found. as i woke up each morning as the sun was yet dawning, i saw no reason for the careless toil and round.

then one day when reading god spoke to my heart, and he told me what i was to do. he said, 'my child you must see, you have potential to be... to be continued in a story about college

...the message god gave me was simple and clear, 'i want you to preach about me. the road you must travel is the ministry path... this is your destiny'. it was now at this point i started to laugh, and argued with god for my plans. yet god said 'my child, please trust me with this, and put your life whole in my hands'

yet i fought with the lord and the plans for my life, and this plan he had outlined for me. as i struggled against it, and made plans that were different, i saw it was destined to be.

without any strength left i came to the lord, and said "my father, please, thy will now be done". he said "child i love you, i'll use you to preach about the life, and death of my son" since then this road i have travelled has sometimes been steep, through wild, jagged places of life. and sometimes i've stumbled and fallen so hard, that the stones cut my soul like a knife.

but the staff of my shepherd will reach out for me, and lift me to cool pastures green. the oil of the spirit anointing my wounds, there i rest by the clear healing stream.

does the story of god's love seem too good to be true? do you find all of this hard to believe? has the cruel world we live in so battered your heart that you find yourself unable to grieve?

i can't say i blame you, i've been where you are, but all i can say is its true... you're wanted, you're precious, you're the love of his heart, and the old rugged cross was for you.

so now more than ever i cherish the cross, more than ever i sit at jesus' feet. the miles of my journey have proved my lord true, and he is so precious to me.

"a journey is best measured in friends rather than miles" tim cahill even though we have changed and we are all finding our own place in the world, we all know that when the tears fall or a smile spreads across our face, we will come to each other because no matter where this crazy world takes us, nothing will ever change so much to the point where we are not all still friends.

"lord, send whatever you need to shape me into your own", was the prayer i carried with me as i came to avondale full of enthusiasm and god. eight months later everything seemed to have fallen apart. it seemed like god had set me up for a fall. my heart and spirit was crushed. i felt more like a lonely flickering candle in the wind than the wildfire i used to be. this damaged my trust in god and in trusting god less i found myself seeking more after things that were not of him. this left me very empty and lonely but by god's grace he eventually drew me back to him.

from this experience i found that i am not defined so much by what i know about god as i am defined by my longing for him. i also found that without god and his love, passion and purpose i am nothing! once again i realised that seeking non-godly stuff leaves a painful emptiness. but as i look back god answered my prayer, he shaped me into his own... a GOD SEEKER.

my spiritual walk over my time here at college has been an ongoing press to know jesus more, amongst the push and pull of distractions that we young people face today. the greatest blessings i have known at college are the friends who have encouraged me towards god and have stood by me through the years.

you meet so many people here, but in the end there are the ones you know you will always have around. thank you all for helping me have a great 5 years here. but most of all, it is god who has never left my side, and has taught me what i need to know about walking the narrow path, even if i don't understand what is happening at the time, or it hurts in the process. but god knows the plans he has for me, plans to give peace and hope. amen.

i'm not able to count the blessings i've received daily since i've been here at avondale. coming here and not knowing anyone, i've been able to meet some amazing people who lift me up to christ, and i know i've formed relationships that i'll treasure for the rest of my life. i can't convey the gratitude for the blessings i've received except by radiating the love that christ has shown to me, through avondale, to everyone else i see.

the faculty of arts is unique in that we have a dynamic range of subjects that teaches us to value ourselves as social and spiritual beings. teaching in the arts is like cultivating a hobby and the best thing about it is that you learn with your students about life and art and the lessons are always new and the search is never over. together, we learn to value ideas, respect the practical, cherish the imagination and dream of spaces bigger than the ones we reside in. for me, this year has been unique in that i was able to produce with my students an interpretation of shakespeare's 'the tempest'. the outcome of the play was as magical as the experience i had of bonding and sharing a common vision with my students over a period of twelve weeks. the success of the play is a testimony of the vision, energy and poetic talent of young people who are given a chance to believe in themselves. and the arts is first and always, a haven for and a home to believers!

here are a few words about the music department and the souls that live there... literally. this year began with over 30 students enrolled as majors and what a diverse group they are! keith is the practical joker, who comes up with wise comments in singers rehearsal at the most inconvenient times. kara, toni, and aimee are apt to slug him if he gets too happy in harmony class and of course sharon tolhurst is there to moderate the lively discussions. how lively are they? so lively that i have had to come across the hall a few times to see what all the action was about as they are on the floor laughing their faces off. all in good fun of course.

the excitement spills over as this mob tours the countryside with memories of the 'promise' singing every broadway show known to mankind with the lillehagens and elyse taylor leading. all this was on the way for a midnight stroll on the westbank in melbourne. it did keep me from driving off the road from sheer exhaustion. thanks for that, guys. certainly chris koelma's slapping has kept us entertained, both at masterclass and at the joash benefit where rhys joined him to pound some heads.

they say variety is the spice of life and musically we have it. consider the lively antics of the fishers as they bob and sway on the stage; it's certainly poetry and musicality in motion. the brass band gave a lively demonstration of motion as they covered the parade ground at morisset in record style and grace during the anzac parade. the award for the most graceful, however, is a tie between the chicken fights at port macquarie and a certain conductor who glided across the stage at the college church earlier this year. believe it or not we do actually get some study and work done here in the music department. all in good fun.

so, what do you make of hamlet's question? was he simply excusing himself from taking action? who you are if you are not aboriginal, but live in australia? compare your concept of personal identity with that of writers from the caribbean and malaysia. or discuss it over an autobiography, or a novel by a female author. how about trying to figure out what motivated those great generals (or butchers) alexander the great, caesar, napoleon and hitler. ambition? pride? vengeance? did any good result from their evils? what do you owe to the puritans of 17th century england? or the egyptians of biblical times? maybe you'd rather ask what is the future of the australian environment and what we can do about it. how could urban planning improve our well-being? how could you make a difference in the lives of people who are affected by poverty, say in thailand or mongolia? how about finding out exactly what it is that makes people believe an advertisement? or how to make that graphic design irresistibly attractive? want to write for the movies? or broadcast to the world? if you are passionate about it, meet with others who share your passion.

international development studies give a man a fish, and he will eat for a day. teach a man to fish, and he will eat for a lifetime.

taking classes in the faculty of arts/humanities is like embarking on a fascinating journey through the halls of time, filled with windows waiting to be cast open.

where else on campus can you soar with classical music, delve into the grit of physical geography, sip with satisfaction from a glass of poetry, immerse oneself in the legend of anzac's, toy with state-of-the-art communications technology and shed a tear for hiv/aids orphans? where else can you create masterpieces as you write yourself, or dabble in lives of ancient peoples?

'excitingly diverse' best describes the faculty of arts/humanities. for example, international development studies students start in their first year by looking at global issues like poverty, disease and hunger. after a short detour into environmental issues they plunge into a second year development experience. in 2006 students visited thailand, mongolia, papua new guinea and pakistan. third year students study the history of poverty alleviation and learn real skills for development workers.

whether students dabble in a single faculty of arts/humanities subject or immerse themselves in double majors, almost all agree that the journey is interesting.

windows into worlds unknown are the very best windows to open and climb through!

beatitudes for teachers (based on matthew 5: 3-12) blessed are the poor in spirit, money and time for theirs is the classroom.

blessed are those who mourn, for they will be given a delightful class.

blessed are the meek,
for they will inherit the paperwork for accreditation.

blessed are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, for they will be become a principal.

blessed are the merciful, for they will be shown mercy by the students.

blessed are the pure in heart, for they will see god shining through each of their pupils.

blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called early childhood teachers.

blessed are those who are persecuted because of righteousness, for theirs is the high school staffroom.

blessed are the primary teachers when people insult you, persecute you and falsely say all kinds of evil against you because of me.

rejoice and be exceedingly glad, because great is your reward in the school and in heaven, for in the same way they persecuted the teachers who were before you.

education faculty

like the children we aim to prepare our graduates to teach, the faculty of education is in the middle of a growth spurt. do you remember when clothes didn't quite fit, you were all elbows and feet, everything seemed frustrating and awkward. our faculty's growth spurt brought us new challenges in the form of rooms that were too small, new subjects and courses were in their early awkward stage of development, and finding places for practice teaching became a year-long job. just as individuals emerge from their growth stages with new abilities and confidence we are confident and excited by the challenges ahead.

"who cares what subject you are meant to be teaching, just love your students! teach and make a difference. teachers change the world — one student at a time."

but i love to be outdoors. i prefer being outdoors to, you know, being inside. keith carradine as the students move to the start line i reflect on the journey they have travelled. i have taught this fitness class twelve times already, but it is still my favourite. this event represents its culmination for another year.

the semester commenced with fitness assessments, including the infamous 'beep' test. in week three came the aquathon — a 400 metre swim followed by a 3 km run. in week six some went further than ever before, completing a 5 km course. that increased to 6 km in week eight, and then 8 km in week eleven.

now they are about to embark upon 10 km. they have different goals: to beat a certain time, to run without stopping, but most just aim to finish.

only a few short months ago, some believed themselves incapable of going the distance. today they will achieve, and it will remain with them for a lifetime.

i feel blessed to be part of their progression. it has been a privilege to share their journey. it will be a joy to witness their triumph.

visual communication

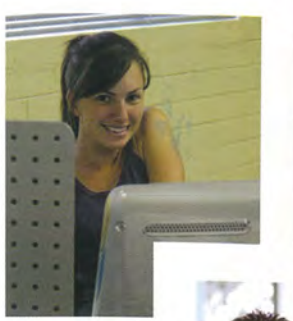

design grids, briefs, typography, fonts, em dashes, systems, procedures, client presentation, finished art, eps, pdf, layout, traffic, project management, concepts, brainstorm, design, deadline, deadline, deadline... these words are now firmly embedded in the minds of the 2006 graphic design studio students, our first team of students to drive 'that design', avondale's brand new educational and commercial graphic design studio.

it all began over 12 months ago... a vision for avondale's graphic design studio was born. the design studio students of 2006 are the pioneering team who have been responsible for the development of 'that design's' corporate brand. from developing the name, logo and stationery and a commercial operations manual, right through to the look and feel of the studio space.

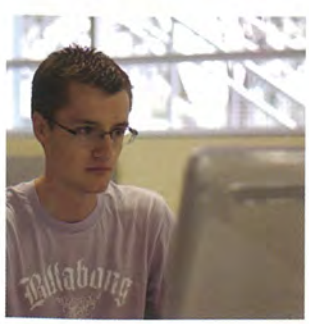

this journey has had many twists and turns and the odd tiny tantrum. respect, support, clarity of vision and a great sense of humor have been the essential ingredients to realise our vision. and i am proud to say that we made it! we have a stunning environment with which we work in and a team of highly talented designers who can project manage and design any task put before them.

whilst developing that design, the students have also had to work on an extensive range of commercial client projects including this spectacular jacaranda that you hold now, web sites, card games and posters... just to name a few (yes fatigue has been a constant player in levels of sanity within the studio). in addition they have worked on international client work which includes; a dvd series for albany international's 40th anniversary and a gorgeous corporate brand for global sisters, a unique organisation providing sustainable employment opportunities for women in developing countries.

i am proud of each of the students for their personal successes, for what they have created for avondale; and for who they have become. i wish each and every student complete success in the next phase of their journey. thank you for creating a wonderful foundation for future graphic designers of avondale college.

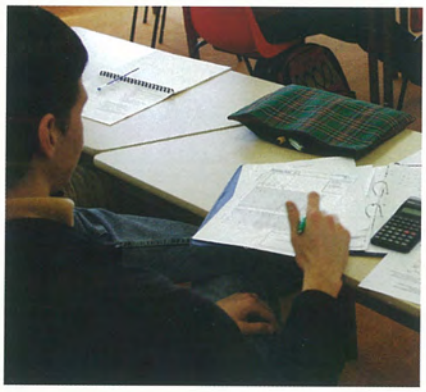

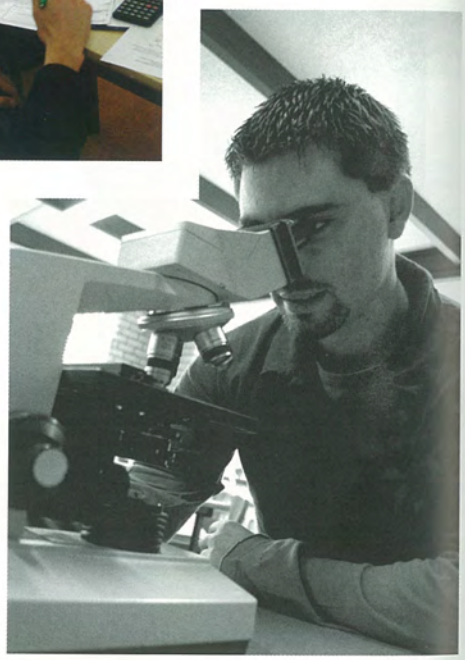

science and maths

science students have been graduating from non-sda accredited degrees since 1953, longer than any other avondale program. in 1949, principal murdoch, himself a graduate of london university, decided to offer an external bsc at avondale through that institution. the first three graduates were eric magnusson, laurence draper and ken thompson, all of whom later completed phd's and also served at various times as head of the science department. incidentally, these fellows are still doing science, and can be found in retirement, helping out in our faculty from time to time. this tradition of further study proudly continues, as a high proportion of recent graduates earn post-graduate qualifications at various universities.

australia is short of scientists, and schools acutely short of qualified science teachers like the ones we produce! accordingly, the faculty of science and mathematics enthusiastically recruits students: through its science summer camp program for yr 10 and 11 students, now in its 25th year, and an extensive program of guest presentations at secondary schools. the dedication and competence of its staff ensure a quality learning experience for students. the faculty even goes to the extent of organising a tutoring program in which senior students are encouraged to tutor secondary students from the local schools. guest lectures and seminars, like this years' on 'design and intelligence', featuring international guest dr michael denton, keep the action happening in our department.

as i reflect on 2006 i am reminded that this year, like preceding years, drew together a diverse group of students and staff to be moulded into a cohesive working unit. a group of people who, amongst others, focused on growth, critical thinking, turning theory into practice and the development of career options. furthermore, the ongoing emphasis on creative service to our wider community by staff and students allows us to make a difference. a difference here at college and in the lives of those others we contact. the combination of these skills sets our business program apart from others and is one that i believe will long be remembered by our student community. we invite our readers to consider these differences and join the 'a' team.

dear gran

this year's been great! as you know, it's the last year of my bachelor of nursing degree, and i am without a doubt ready to graduate! it's been tough at times, attempting to wade through the miry swamp of assigned course work, remaining ever wary of the tangled masses of vines of assignment due dates ready to ensnare you at even the slightest hint of slackened pace. not to mention the unsightly creatures (which in this case represent clinical practice) lurking beneath the murky waters of confusion, forever snapping at your heels beneath the boggy mire, goading you on, while constantly slapping at the annoying mosquitoes of time management! it's been quite a fight for survival, yet somehow i've endured!

without the assistance of the lecturers here, granting the last hope of extensions, encouraging you even when it all seems so overwhelming, affirming the skills learned, i don't know if i could have persisted. not to mention my friends from class! despite the fact that they were often, at least partly the reason for the copious amounts of procrastination (and thus the need for those extensions), but they've proven to be a fun and positive influence, and one i couldn't do without.

the school of nursing has had a whole bunch of social events such as the pool party, karaoke nights, paint balling, blood donation, and the end of year formal. it's been heaps of fun, getting to know people from my class better, and being able to belt out a jon bon jovi classic at the same time!

and then there's god, who has become more and more at home within my life, as i have learned the true value and meaning of service and ministry within the healthcare setting. the festival of faith also really challenged and encouraged me, and i know that it's only through the grace of jesus that i'm able to write to you to say "i'm graduating!".

love from your grandson, the health care professional!

our whole operation is a journey and our business is to educate others in how to journey efficiently, effectively and with professionalism.

this year has been a year of major transition for the school of aviation. the cooranbong airport was closed at the end of last year and the flying training operations have been transferred to the hunter valley campus at cessnock. the process of maintaining operations while relocating has been a real challenge. first there was the challenge of finding new premises and setting up facilities. this has taken time, effort and patience. then there was the task of identifying a new client base.

students in the full-time aviation program have come from a wide variety of backgrounds this year. america, england, hong kong, kiribati, papua new guinea, south africa, solomon islands, and australia are all countries represented in this year's student cohort.

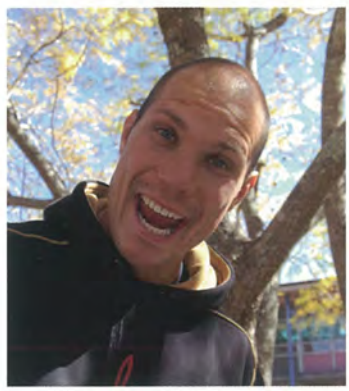

the englishman hates animals and yet was chased by a carnivorous cow while walking; the i-kiribati had never driven under the water of sydney harbour in a car; the american had never roomed with a png highlander before and yet they were all journeying together in small cockpit spaces. they also all travelled together to and from the airport in the bus each day and developed a lot of camaraderie as their skills were honed for flying and life in general.

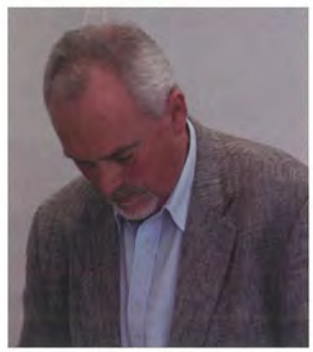

what high points have occurred — ex-students now flying internationally with qantas visiting their alma mata, virgin airline training pilots returning to assist with theory course lectures, guided tours through the sydney international airport radar and traffic control tower rooms, extended navigational exercises covering much of the east coast of australia and on into the desert areas of central australia, farewell parties as students and ex-students leave to take up positions such as missionary pilot in papua new guinea.

quite apart from the full-time students in the avondale program we also have those in the high school course who have a really exciting journey through year 11 and 12 as they learn how thrilling it is to be able to fly an aeroplane without anyone else assisting while they are not yet old enough to drive a car.

what do you think about when you think 'theology faculty' at avondale? probably dry and dusty old men! and, to some extent you might be right. however, things are changing. we do desperately need a woman lecturer in our faculty, so presently wendy jackson is in the final stages of her sponsored doctoral studies at andrews university. it is anticipated that she will then come to the college to teach systematic theology and biblical studies.

changes are also evident in our students. over the past couple of years we've had increasing numbers of women begin training for ministry in the adventist church. at the moment, between 20 and 25 percent of our students are women; depending on whether we count lili radziszewski once or twice! these articulate women have brought a different approach to the faculty. some of them have been particularly active in reviving a student-led ministry fellowship — figtree (formed in god).

in september figtree totally organised a weekend retreat at crosslands youth centre for students and spouses as well as for theology faculty members. although the heavy rain limited the possibilities for walking the forest trails, it didn't dampen their enthusiasm for engaging in prayer, reflection, ministry strategies, and chatter.

dry and dusty? hardly! the students are active around college church, running religious instruction in the local public school, taking bible studies, engaging in pastoral externships along the east coast of australia, and preaching in local churches.

my time in kazakhstan has definitely been an experience. before i came here i had never even heard of 'kazakhstan' and i wondered why god was calling me to this very unique country. a land full of fashionably dressed, high-heeled women, crazy drivers and spitting!!

this volunteer year has probably been one of the most challenging and most rewarding years of my life. a year full of beautiful people, snowball fights, growth, change, loneliness, tears, hiking in the mountains, fellowship, culture and so much more.

i have learnt that when god calls you somewhere he doesn't leave you all alone. he gives you confidence when you feel totally inadequate. he gives you joy when you feel like crying, and through every good time and every challenge he draws you closer to his heart.

i teach english over here in kazakhstan and there is nothing that i love more than seeing the students coming to church and bible studies. i love spending time with them and getting to know more about their culture and who they are.

one night some of my students took me up to a place called kok tebe which overlooks the whole city of almaty. it was really beautiful to see all the lights of the city and to laugh and spend time with my students.

i feel so blessed that god called me to this country and i know that he brought me here for a reason. through this journey he has been teaching me to trust him more and to bring all of my worries and insecurities to him.

if you ever have the chance to volunteer then i would say "go for it". my experience has taught me so much about life, about myself and about god. and i wouldn't want to be anywhere else in the world but kazakhstan.

leroy judge

it all started when i was getting sick of studying. one morning i prayed to god and asked for his guidance in my life. a minister happened to speak about volunteering not long after and it was like it was a direct calling from god. i made up my mind then and went for it. i got my application in as soon as i could even though for takeoff, make sure your seat belt is tightly fastened, your carry-on baggage is stowed, your seat back is upright and your table is stowed.

i thought it was too late to apply for the denmark job, but i got accepted and everything just worked out perfectly.

it's really hard to leave all your friends and family and go to a place that is totally out of your comfort zone, but sometimes you can't keep living a life that is just nice and easy. i believe that the challenges we face determine who we are. the most important thing that has helped me is to remember that there is a god and he is always there for us.

it has only been a few weeks since i arrived but there have been so many times when i have asked him for help when it felt like there were too many difficulties associated with coming to a new country. but it's so awesome to know that god is not just the god of australia, or god of the spd. he is god of the entire universe and no matter where you are he is there to help you.

and since being over here i realise just how many languages god must know! the danes reckon danish is the heavenly language though! our god is so awesome!

lastly, i want to tell you all to take a leap of faith. what's the harm in taking a year out of studying to have an experience that could potentially change your life and help you see the world?

hope you are all well, and as krystle always says; "love always, laugh lots, pray always."

look forward to seeing you all soon!

what do you think about when someone says the word denmark? do you picture a tower of red, blue, green and red lego? do you see vikings pillaging villages? or do you see princess mary waving regally from her balcony? when i first arrived all i could think about was snow and cold. it was the most amazing experience to start my new year with thick layers of snow everywhere i looked. i felt like i was in another world. now when i think about denmark i don't just see the cold snow, delicious danish pastries, salty licorice, lego, or even our very own princess mary. instead, when i think about denmark i see a training ground full of obstacles and beauty that god has placed me in, to grow me and to teach me wonderful truths about myself but most importantly about himself. one truth that never ceases to amaze me is god's faithfulness. no matter how many times i have just felt like throwing in the towel or felt completely worthless and unable to serve god; he has so graciously bent down into all my mess, to tenderly help me back up onto my feet.

it is challenging being at a seventh-day adventist boarding school and with a handful of other student missionaries being responsible for the lives of a hundred or so teenagers, most of whom hate the idea of being good and christian. there are days when your heart just aches for these kids, knowing that each one is so lost and searching for god but they don't realise it or even want to think about it. i have felt so helpless in the face of such doubt. it has been challenging to have to look at god through the eyes of unbelievers and this in turn has managed to challenge my own perception of god and how i live my life.

with all the distractions of the modern day world and christians not behaving like christ intended us to be, the idea of a loving and caring god who gets his hands dirty in our lives has diminished and become unnecessary. it has really hit home to me that it isn't only what we teach as christians but what we do with what we teach. i know you have heard this so many times but it is something that we should never stop thinking about because it is our mission on this earth. everyone is looking for an example to follow, for directions on how to live their lives. as christians we are blessed to have christ as that example and therefore our mission as commissioned by jesus christ is to actively live as examples of him. only then can god become more real to the world, only then can god really make an impact on people's lives.

it is a most rewarding experience that god has blessed me with. to step out of what you know so well into a new culture and new ways of thinking is really a great way to grow and learn more about god. i challenge everyone to each day seek to step out of what is comfortable it doesn't have to be going to a different country, although it is legendary. "stand up! shine! your new day is dawning. the glory of the lord shines brightly on you. the earth and its people are covered with darkness, but the glory of the lord is shining upon you." isaiah 60:1-2 things we will miss about college seeing my friends everyday. the late nights staying up to finish an assignment due the following day. the cleaner waking you up by vacuuming the carpet in the corridor. holidays! i am going to miss everyone! living so close to work and knowing all the ains at the san. sitting behind the ever-so-chatty miss thiele and miss varadyszabo. the mannequins in the labs. being able to wag or avoid responsibility. jimmy jay's irrelevant tangents. learning cool stuff and being challenged. the people, the maintenance men, jamming in the lounge room, singing hymns loud and out of tune at wahroonga church, the view from the roof.

the 'special times'. mighty muffins for breakfast. playing x-box with the boys during lunch breaks. sass and bide. the people and the atmosphere. spending 24/7 with friends and having no responsibilities. cows!! tea parties in the cleaning closest. first year friends. watson hall. good mates. the crazy social life. dorm life. all the complaints about the caf food. mates. my american boys. friendships. all the endless hours of free time. having a life. the smell of weetbix. all the sport. not having to cook for myself or do dishes. nilfisk the vacuum cleaner. having all the spare time in the world.

the college atmosphere, the people who i've met and become friends with. scaring the pants off people down boys walk in the dark on friday nights. getting up early in the morning and running the tracks through the bush. having everyone singing me happy birthday in the caf. finding rat poo in my spinach at the caf. midnight bi-lo runs, but not travelling in the boot! (trunk). trips to the watagans to watch the sunset. sleepovers at the beach in summer, with bonfires and marshmallows. spilling secrets and news to the girls. having all your besties just next door. unlimited hot water. no sleep in the mac labs. jumping on the swinging bridge. all the crazy things i've been able to get away with while i'm still allowed to be a kid.

whatever journey you undertake is worthwhile if it becomes part of your season of giving to life and your choice to love humanity. the writer derek walcott sums up the two choices we have in life, to either look back at the "ruins of our history" and see only the "shipwreck" or to look ahead and believe always that we are morning-gatherers. for us then, we stand each moment at the threshold of a new dawn, irrespective of the brokenness of our lives. for those of us who believe, it is always morning where we stand.

delight in the lord,
and he will give you
your heart's desires.
commit everything you do to the lord. trust him, and he will help you.
psalm 37: 4-5

focus on him
when you commit yourself to the lord and focus on him, he'll enable you to live your dreams. he doesn't want you to just settle for an ordinary life. instead, he longs to give you his vision, his strength and his dreams for your life. the more you center your life on him, the more his dreams will become your dreams. and remember, he formed the mountains and scattered the stars in the sky. his dreams will take you beyond anything you'll dream on your own.

the FUTURE will bring

when i look back on my time at avondale college i can assure you it's not going to be the lecture theatre experiences or the academic achievements that will spring to mind. rather it will be the people that have been with me on my journey of the last four years. it won't be the essays i submitted but the relationships that have come and gone, the friendships i have made and the friendships that have faded away, each contributing their own individual and unique experiences to that journey and adding to the photo album of college memories.

the degree i will receive, and which i could have worked harder for, will merely be a support act in reminiscing the main events in my time at avondale. in reflection it will be the person you became and the friends who helped you to become that individual that will stay with you the longest and be the platform for your life ahead of you.

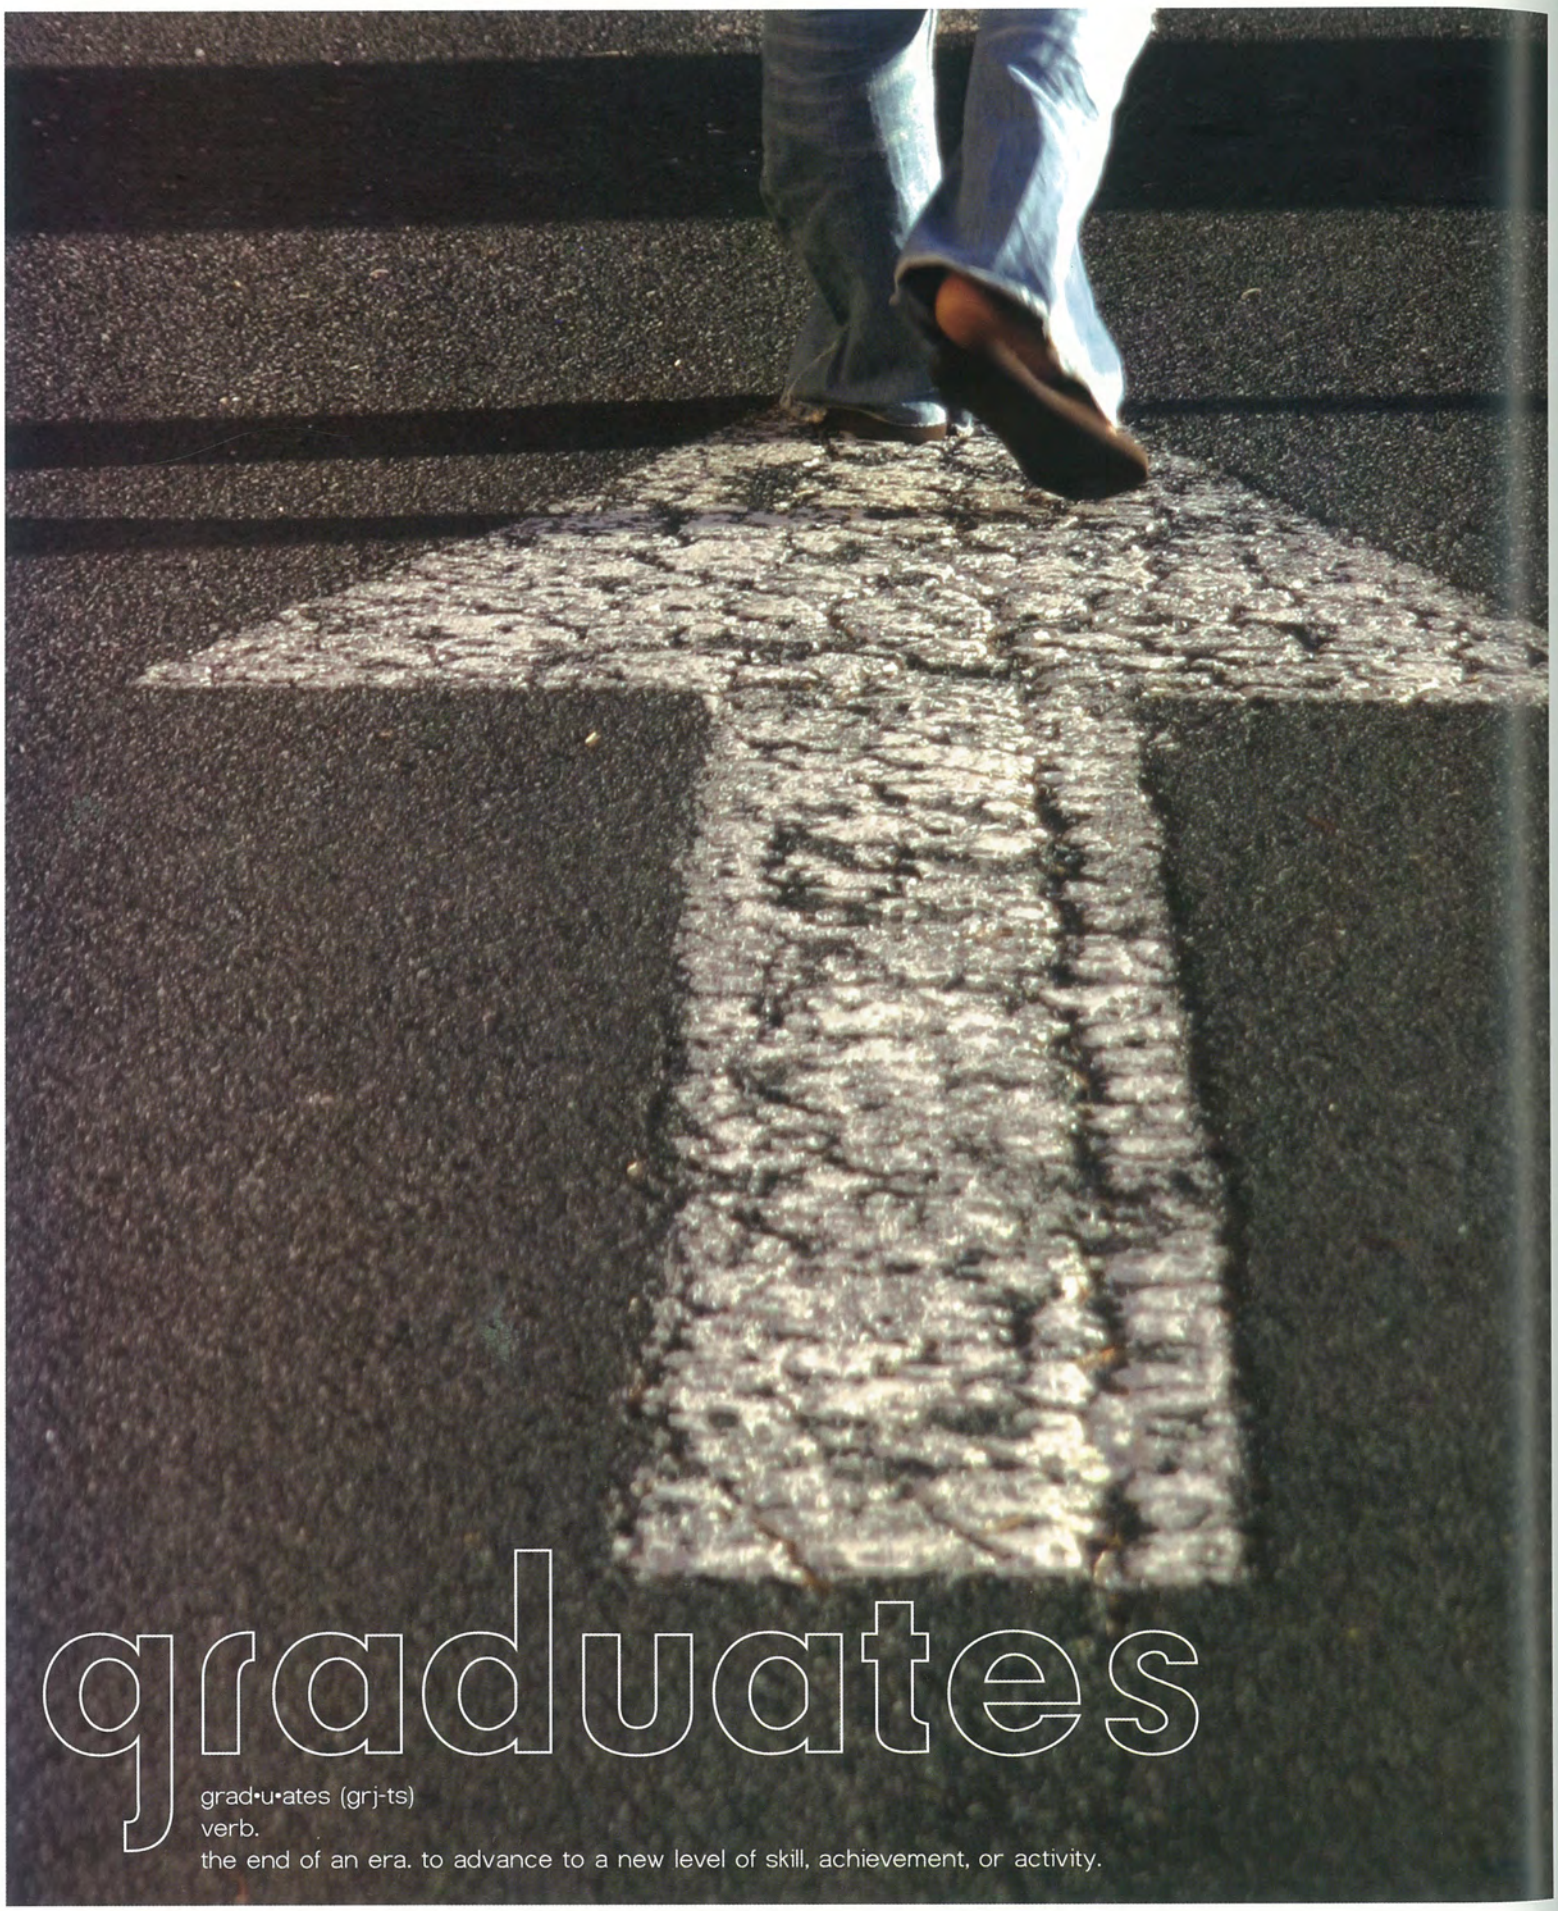

i would like to thank everyone that has contributed to my journey, i have to give special mention to team hitp, phive, credless, the original suns, the core 4 and all of those who know that they have been a special part of that journey, you know who you are!

the year was 2003 and i was heading down the pacific highway in my red 1971 datsun 1200, packed to the roof and as i listened to blink 182's 'going away to college' i pondered the beginning of a new era in my life and what avondale college had in store for me.

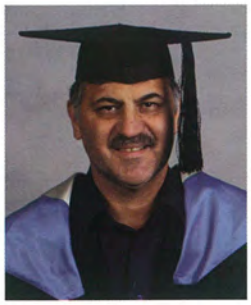

i settled into room 129 with fraser my fellow port macquarian who many believed to be my brother if not the same person (maybe it was the hair?). as time passed, new eras began and some came to an end. we changed rooms to across the hall, i sold my beloved datsun for $200, i eventually moved outdoors, americans came and left, basketball seasons started and finished. all these are things i will never forget from the past four years; people have simply grown and times have changed.

as i drive out these gates one last time as a student, with my degree in hand in a newer car and with shorter hair than i arrived with, i will reflect on my college journey and my growth. it is more likely i will be listening to jeff buckley's 'last goodbye' than blink 182 but i won't look back. this time in my life has been amazing and will always be remembered fondly, but it's just the end of another era and a new one is about to begin...

this is not the end.

it is not even the beginning of the end. but it is, perhaps, the end of the beginning. - sir winston churchill.
